

The Pitt Press Shakespeare

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

SHAKESPEARE

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

EDITED BY A. W. VERITY

CAMBRIDGE
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS

1948

Printed in Great Britain at the University Press, Cambridge (Brooke Crutchley, University Printer)
and published by the Cambridge University Press
(Cambridge, and Bentley House, London)
Agents for U S A., Canada, and India Macmillan

First Edition	1893
Reprinted (three times)	1894
	1898
	1900 1901
	1903
	1905
	1908
	1910
	1911
	1912
(with corrections, etc.)	1917
	1919
(twice)	1923
	1924
	1927
	1930
	1936
	1942
	1948

NOTE

I DESIRE to express my obligations to previous editions of A Midsummer-Night's Dream. I have not, as a rule, recorded my indebtedness in the Notes, partly because they do not profess to be an original contribution to the study of the play, still more because the constant mention of commentators takes up space and tends to confuse young students. The modern edition to which I owe most is that of the American scholar, Mr W. J. Rolfe. My debt to Schmidt's Shakespeare-Lexicon I cannot attempt to estimate.

In arrangement the volume closely resembles my editions of Paradise Lost, though its general character is more elementary. My aim has been to make the Notes tolerably simple and for the most part brief. They explain rather than illustrate by parallel passages, and little space is devoted to textual matters, of which the young student seldom makes anything. To relieve and simplify the Notes, and partly also that this aspect of Shakespeare may be studied separately from the text, the philological matter has been placed almost entirely in the Glossary. It will be observed that the Introduction and Notes contain a certain amount of literary criticism.

Mr Flather of Emmanuel College, and Mr Whibley of Pembroke College, kindly read parts of the proofs, and another friend compiled the Index of words

A. W. V.

NOTE TO THE SIXTH EDITION

THE metrical "Hints" added to this edition aim at giving in a small compass the gist of what is commonly agreed upon as to the development and variations of Shakespeare's blank verse. It is almost superfluous to mention my obligations to Dr Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, which deals more or less with the subject-matter of each of the sections of the "Hints." I am also indebted to other ~~writers~~ and to friends.

A. W. V

May, 1900 .

CONTENTS

	PAGES
INTRODUCTION . . . . .	ix-lit
A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM .	i-66
NOTES . . . . .	67-120
GLOSSARY . . . . .	121-136
APPENDIX . . . . .	137-146
NOTES ON METRE . . . . .	147-157
NOTES ON SHAKESPEARE'S ENGLISH	158-160
INDEX OF WORDS . . . . .	161-164

INTRODUCTION

THE DATE OF THE PUBLICATION OF THE PLAY

A Midsummer-Night's Dream was entered on the Register of the Stationers' Company October 8, 1600. The Quarto editions. Two Quarto editions of the play were published in that year: the one "Imprinted for Thomas Fisher"; the other "Printed by James Roberts."

Probably the Quarto published by Roberts was an unauthorised reprint of the other. The differences of reading between them are not very important. Fisher's edition I refer to as the "1st Quarto."

In the 1st Folio (1623), which was the first edition of Shakespeare's collected plays, A Midsummer-Night's Dream was printed from The 1st Folio. Roberts's Quarto, with some alterations of the text that are important in only a few instances. A fourth version ~~that~~ has to be taken into account is that of the 2nd Folio (1632). This 2nd Folio was a reprint of the The 2nd Folio. 1st, correcting some of its errors, and introducing some conjectural changes which are often quite unnecessary.

A modern text of A Midsummer-Night's Dream is not printed entirely from any one of these four The basis of the modern text. original editions, the two Quartos and the two Folios; it is made up of all four. The wisest course is to keep as close as possible to the 1st Quarto.

II

THE PROBABLE DATE OF THE COMPOSITION OF THE PLAY

The date of the composition of A Midsummer-Night's Dream is much disputed. I believe that the play Date of the play. was written at the end of the year 1594 or the beginning of 1595. In attempting to determine when one of Shakespeare's plays was written we have to weigh External evidence. of two kinds—external and internal. The sole piece of external evidence with regard to the date of this play is this: it is mentioned by Francis Meres in Palladis Tamia, 1598, in his list of Shakespeare's comedies. That mention of the play proves that it was written and performed before 1598. No other work printed prior to 1598 contains any unmistakable reference to or quotation from A Midsummer-Night's Dream.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

The simplest form of internal evidence is an allusion Internal evidence to some contemporary event or literary work. A clear allusion of this kind is very valuable; such an allusion, e.g., as that in Henry V (Act v, Chorus, 29-34) to the expedition of Essex to Ireland. It is a reference that no one can dispute; it assists us to fix the date of Henry V very precisely.

There is nothing similar in A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Two passages have been thought to contain some allusion, viz. II. 1. 79-117 and V. 52, 53; but neither is certain. Indeed, the second passage has been variously interpreted as an allusion to three different events, though it is ~~an~~ mere conjecture that the lines allude to any special event at all. Now any one can see that a passage which is open to such diverse explanations does not afford certain evidence as to the date of the play. And it may be said at once that there is no passage in A Midsummer-Night's Dream which justifies any certain conclusion.

In the absence therefore of precise internal evidence, we must fall back upon the indications presented by the style and broad characteristics of the play. Indications that it is an early work. Consideration of these shows that A Midsummer-Night's Dream is an early work, though not one of Shakespeare's earliest. Its prevailing tone is youthfulness. One feels in reading it that it is the outcome of youthful imagination. It is not instinct with serious purport and deep thought. It is not touched with cynicism or sadness like some of the later comedies. The puns<sup>1</sup> and conceits<sup>1</sup> (i.e. strained, artificial turns of fancy and expression) noticeable in Shakespeare's early works are noticeable here. There are points of contact between this play and the undoubtedly early piece, The Comedy of Errors. There are links with another early comedy, Love's Labour's Lost.

<sup>1</sup> See I. 1. 186; II. 2. 57; III. 2. 267, 268; IV. 2. 44; V. 118, 254, 312 (with notes).

The verse also points to an early date. No great stress, indeed, should be laid on the prevalence of rhyme (usually a conclusive proof of an early date), because the character of the play required rhyme. A Midsummer-Night's Dream is very similar in type to the Masque, a form of drama just then coming into vogue; and the verse-portions of Elizabethan Masques were commonly in rhyme. Thus the speeches of the goddesses introduced in the Masque in Act IV of The Tempest are all in rhyme. I suppose that at whatever point in his career Shakespeare had written A Midsummer-Night's Dream he would still have employed much rhyme.

It is rather the blank verse that reveals signs of immaturity. The number of lines<sup>2</sup> with no extra syllable; the frequency with which the pause falls at the close of the line or couplet; the tendency to balance the line with double epithets—cf. e.g. "By paved fountain or by rushy brook"; the uniformity of rhythm in the long speeches—cf. e.g. Titania's in II. 1. 79-117: these and other details stamp the blank verse of this play as that of Shakespeare's first period of dramatic authorship. In fine, the whole drift of the evidence afforded by the general characteristics of the play is to show that it was written several years before the date (1598) at which it was mentioned by Meres.

On the other hand, it cannot safely be placed so far back as 1590, the date to which some critics have assigned it. So early a date, which would refer A Midsummer-Night's Dream to the very outset of Shakespeare's career, appears improbable when we compare the piece with The

<sup>1</sup> See II. 1. 196, 197; II. 2. 111; III. 2. 129 (notes).

<sup>2</sup> i.e. lines that belong to the regular type of blank verse e.g. "The cours | of true | love név|er did | run smóoth" See the "Hints on Metre," p. 147

Comedy of Errors, Love's Labour's Lost, and The Two Gentlemen of Verona. A Midsummer-Night's Dream marks an advance upon them. Belonging to the same group as these early comedies, it is the best of them—and presumably the latest: it completes the sequence. Some date therefore between the earliest suggested year 1590 and the latest possible year 1597 is most likely to be right.

Probable date Several eminent critics<sup>1</sup> incline to 1594 or 1594 or 1595. 1595, and we cannot be far wrong whichever we select.

III

THE SUPPOSED ALLUSION IN ACT II, SCENE I, ll. 81-114, AND ITS BEARING ON THE DATE OF THE PLAY

Titania's description in these lines of the disastrous seasons is introduced with singular emphasis —as though the lines, apart from their context, were intended to have some special point and significance such as would be imparted to them by an underlying allusion which the audience would readily understand. Now we know that the summer of the year 1594 was a disastrous season such as the speech describes, being cold, rainy and tempestuous to a remarkable degree. Of the excessive cold and rain, and consequent dearth, of that summer three independent and detailed accounts survive: (1) in the ms. diary (1564-1602) of a well-known quack-physician of the time, Dr Simon Forman; (2) in the entry for 1594 in Stowe's Chronicle; (3) in certain discourses<sup>2</sup> of an Elizabethan divine, Dr King, delivered at York in 1594. All three accounts describe the summer-months of 1594 in terms similar to those of Titania's speech. And to these may be added a reference in the poem Charitie by a minor poet of the day, Churchyard

<sup>1</sup> Malone, Halliwell, Dowden, Rolfe say 1594; Stokes (Chronological Order of Shakespeare's Plays) says 1595; Gervinus "about 1594 or 1595"; Ward (Dramatic Literature) "between 1593-1597."

<sup>2</sup> Lectures upon Jonas delivered at Yorke in the yeare of our Lorde 1594.

Published in 1595, it glances at the preceding year:

"A colder time in world was never seene:
The skies do loure, the sun and moone wax dim;
Summer scarce known, but that the leaves are greene.
The winter's waste drives water ore the brim;
Upon the land great flotes of wood may swim."

We may infer from these four independent records that the summer of 1594 impressed contemporary feeling greatly; and if A Midsummer-Night's Dream was written and performed at the close of that year, or at the beginning of 1595, when this impression was still vividly present to people's thoughts, the significance of Titania's description would be much enhanced.

IV

THE SUPPOSED ALLUSION, OR ALLUSIONS,
IN ACT V, ll. 52, 53

second passage which has been thought (in my opinion, wrongly) to contain an allusion that might illustrate the date of composition, and which may therefore be discussed conveniently here, is v. 52, 53:

Act v, ll. 52, 53; variously interpreted.

"The thrice-three Muses mourning for the death
Of Learning, late deceas'd in beggary."

In these lines three allusions have been variously traced.

(1) According to some, the reference is to the death of Spenser. Spenser was a learned poet, and he died in poverty: so far the allusion would be appropriate, though one might have expected Spenser's poetry rather than his learning to be mentioned. But Spenser died in January 1599; and the date 1599 renders the reference impossible, unless we assume that the lines were inserted some time after the original production of the play; of which there is no evidence.

(2) According to others, the reference is to Spenser's The Teares of the Muses. Spenser's poem does introduce the Nine Muses lamenting the decay of learning and neglect of literature at the time. And the alliteration of Shakespeare's lines might be a glance at Spenser's love of alliteration. But The Teares of the Muses appeared in 1591, and if we accept 1594 or 1595 as the date of A Midsummer-Night's Dream, the words "late deceas'd" are not appropriate. Moreover there are great objections to this theory apart from the difficulty of dates. Firstly, the remark made by Theseus—"That is some satire, keen and critical"—is not a very suitable description of Spenser's work. The Teares of the Muses is more a lament than a "satire." Secondly, there is a ring of sarcasm in the manner in which Theseus rejects the subject as "keen and critical" (i.e. carping). It is probable that Shakespeare and Spenser, having common friends and patrons, were acquainted, and there is no reason for thinking that Shakespeare would speak with disrespect of any work by the elder poet. Further, sarcasm directed against this particular poem would be highly inappropriate, since it contains those friendly lines ("Our pleasant Willy" etc.) which almost certainly refer to Shakespeare. The comment that he places in the mouth of Theseus would be an ungracious return for Spenser's compliment.

(3) According to others, the death of the poet and prose-writer Robert Greene is meant. Greene had died "in beggary." He had posed as a learned man—a scholar-poet, with academic training. Thus, being a Cambridge M.A., Greene was careful to place Magister Artium after his name on the title-pages of his earlier plays and pamphlets; and after he received the same degree at Oxford he described himself ostentatiously as Magister Artium utriusque universitatis. The glance therefore at his affectation of learning and at his death amid circumstances of great poverty would be pointed. Also, there was a strong element of "keen and critical" satire in his prose-writings. Indeed, in one famous passage<sup>1</sup> that satire had been directed at Shakespeare himself. But Greene died in the autumn of 1592; so that the words "late deceas'd" seem equally fatal to this theory.

<sup>1</sup> The oft-quoted lines in his Groatsworth of Wit, 1592 (a prose-work), about "the onely Sháke-scene in a country."

Really, there is no necessity to associate the lines with any particular event. It is quite possible that in them Shakespeare simply touches with a passing stroke of light ridicule on the contemporary fashion of deploring the decay of learning. Among a certain class of academic writers who did not catch the attention of the public it was the vogue to lament the neglect of serious literature and mourn over the hard lot of the learned. The Teares of the Muses was a work of this type. The well-known lines at the end of the first sestiad of Marlowe's Hero and Leander were another example. These laments of the learned poets were a sort of literary fashion; and Shakespeare may here intend to ridicule them with the easy satire of the successful man who can afford to be good-natured. The verbal form, however, of his remark was probably suggested by the title of Spenser's poem.

Possible explanation of this passage

Parallels to th.

THE TITLE OF THE PLAY

Why is the play called A Midsummer-Night's Dream?

Midsummer-day is June 24, St John's day. One would naturally infer from the title that the events of the drama were supposed to occur on the night of Midsummer-day. But it is not so. The action of the piece is laid at the end of April and the beginning of May. This is clear from the references in Act iv<sup>1</sup> to the May-day ceremonies. The time of action in Act I is April 29; in Acts II and III the night of April 30; and in the rest<sup>2</sup> of the play May 1. We must look therefore for some other explanation of the title A Midsummer-Night's Dream.

<sup>1</sup> Scene 1, ll. 109, 137, 138. See the note on 109.

<sup>2</sup> The first part of the first scene of Act iv takes place just before the day-break of May.

Midsummer-day, the festival of St John, was formerly one of the chief and most joyous anniversaries of the Christian year. It was to the summer solstice what Christmas still is to the winter. The words of Luke i. 14, that many should rejoice at the birth of St John found a literal fulfilment. On the evening of this day numerous ceremonies and festal customs were observed. Bon-fires, called "St John's Fires," were lit; the houses were decorated with green and illuminated; processions with garlands were made and carols sung; and what is important to our purpose, pageants and "triumphs"<sup>1</sup> (i.e. shows) were performed and plays were acted. This last fact presents, I think, a satisfactory explanation of the title of A Midsummer-Night's Dream, viz. that it is so called because it was a play designed for representation on Midsummer-night<sup>2</sup>. In the same way, Twelfth Night is so called because it was a play designed for representation on Twelfth Night. And to take another appropriate title, The Winter's Tale is "one of those tales which are peculiarly calculated to beguile the dreary leisure of a long winter evening" (Schlegel).

A play composed for a particular festival may be expected to harmonise with the associations of the festival. Twelfth Night, with its pervading atmosphere of genial fun and its happy conclusion, harmonised perfectly with the festal character

Midsummer-night in Shakespeare's time

Celebrated with pageants and plays.

This play written for Midsummer-night; hence its title.

Compare "Twelfth Night"; and "The Winter's Tale."

The play appropriate to the occasion:

<sup>1</sup> For this sense of triumph cf. I. i. 19 and see the Glossary.

<sup>2</sup> Drake thinks that the title may also allude to the popular notion of "Midsummer madness" (cf. Twelfth Night, III. 4. 61), and may have been chosen by Shakespeare in view of the extremely imaginative character of the play. It was supposed (he says) "that the brain, being heated by the intensity of the sun's rays, was more susceptible of those flights of imagination which border on insanity, than at any other period of the year." According to this fanciful view, the title "A Midsummer-Night's Dream" indicated that the play was a mere "flight of imagination"—the outcome of a heated "Midsummer" brain.

of Twelfth Night. A Midsummer-Night's Dream was equally in keeping with the traditional associations of Midsummer-night.

For there were curious superstitions concerning that anniversary. Witches and spirits, unless tradition erred, were peculiarly active then, and strange things happened: things no whit less remarkable than the transformation of Bottom and the wondrous effects of the love-juice. Hence to Shakespeare's audience it must, I think, have seemed extremely appropriate that in a Midsummer-night play there should be so prominent a fairy element.

And here we may note an interesting parallel to Shakespeare's fairy-play, viz. Ben Jonson's Masque The Satyr. This too (as Jonson says) was written for performance "on Midsummer-day at night." And this too was a fairy-piece. The chief character is a "Satyr" (a kind of wood-spirit), and he is addressed as "Pug" (i.e. Puck). "Queen Mab," who disputes with Titania the honour of being Queen of fairydom, is introduced with a "bevy of fairies," whose whimsical acts form the chief matter of the piece. It is significant that the two great masters of Elizabethan drama should each have written a work in which Midsummer-night is associated so pointedly with the denizens of fairy-land.

Thus the supernatural element in A Midsummer-Night's Dream accords with the traditions of Midsummer-night. Similarly the comedy's joyous conclusion in marriage-festivities is in harmony with the joyous character of the Midsummer festival. The play is justified of its title. A Midsummer-Night's Dream was singularly suitable for representation on Midsummer-night.

Shakespeare not only entitles the work a "Dream": he insists upon the title. Gervinus says: Purposely called a "Dream."

"The piece is called a Midsummer-Night's Dream: the Epilogue expresses satisfaction, if the spectator will regard the piece as a dream; for in a dream time and locality are obliterated; a certain twilight and dusk is spread over the whole; Oberon desires that all shall regard the matter as a dream, and so it is. Titania speaks of her adventure as a vision, Bottom of his metamorphosis as a dream; and all the rest awake at last out of a sleep of weariness, and the events leave upon them the impression of a dream. The sober Theseus regards their stories as nothing else than dreams and fantasies."

The emphasis with which Shakespeare enforces this point is not to be mistaken: nor his purpose. To be judged as a "Dream." He will have us understand that we must take the piece for what it professes to be, viz. a fanciful creation (so far as concerns the greater part) in which imagination waywardly follows its every whim and freak, recking naught of probability and making no account of the realities of life. We do not expect logical coherence in a dream. We must not look for it in the fairy fantasies of a dream-comedy.

VI

WAS THE PLAY WRITTEN IN HONOUR OF SOME WEDDING?

In view mainly of the prominence it gives to the theme of marriage A Midsummer-Night's Dream is supposed by many critics to have been written on the occasion of some particular marriage. At the end of the 16th century and the beginning of the 17th the performance of a play at the wedding-festivities of a great nobleman occurred constantly. The pieces composed for such occasions were commonly Masques. Now A Midsummer-Night's Dream (as I observed) is in several features akin to a Masque. It is certainly the sort of play that would be composed for a marriage. And if it was so composed—if it concluded the festivities of some wedding that had taken place on Midsummer-day—then parts of the play (for instance, Oberon's last speech) had at the original representation a particular, a personal, significance which for us is lost.

But though this view is much favoured by the character of the play itself, yet there is no special wedding with which we can confidently associate it. Some, indeed, suppose that the marriage honoured by Shakespeare was that of the Earl of Essex in 1590; others that it was the marriage of the Earl of Southampton (the patron to whom Venus and Adonis and Lucrece were dedicated, once thought the "W. H." of the Sonnets) in 1598. But the dates are fatal to either view. Nor is Mr Fleay's suggestion that the wedding was that in 1595 of the Earl of Derby (whose brother had been patron of the theatrical company of which Shakespeare was a member) more than a mere conjecture.

Plays, especially Masques, were often written for weddings.

Difficulty of connecting this play with any particular wedding.

Perhaps, therefore, it is enough to treat the comedy as it has been treated above, viz. as simply one of the many festival-plays that must have been written for performance on Midsummer-night. We have seen that it is eminently suitable for such an occasion; and, after all, marriage is a tolerably familiar theme on the stage.

VII

THE DIVERSITY OF ACTION IN THE PLAY

The action of A Midsummer-Night's Dream is very varied. There are really four distinct elements in the plot. These elements—skilfully connected by certain links of common interest—are:

Four chief elements of the plot.

(1) the marriage of Theseus and Hippolyta; (2) the preparation and performance of the "interlude" of "Pyramus and Thisbe," which forms part of the festivities at the marriage; (3) the fortunes of the two pairs of lovers whose marriages depend partly on the decision of Theseus; (4) the dispute of Oberon and Titania, who are interested in the marriage of Theseus, together with the tricks of Puck, by whom, at the bidding of Oberon, the final reconciliation of the lovers is effected. An important link between (3) and (4) is the use of the love-juice: "the love troubles of mortals have their miniature counterpart in the jealousy of the elfin royal pair,...and as the human wooers are beguiled by the power of Cupid's magic herb, the fairy queen is in like manner victimized" (Boas).

VIII

THE PROBABLE SOURCES OF CERTAIN DETAILS OF THE ELEMENTS OF THE PLOT

THESEUS AND HIPPOLYTA

What Shakespeare knew concerning Theseus and Hippolyta was probably derived in the main from Shakespeare indebted slightly to: two works:

(1) The Life of Theseus in the translation (1579) of Plutarch's Lives<sup>1</sup> by Sir Thomas North;

(2) The Knight's Tale in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

The Life of Theseus in North's Plutarch gives two legends as to his marriage. According to one, Theseus made an expedition against the Amazons, took "Antiopa the Amazon" prisoner, and married her: hence the allusion to Antiopa in the play (II. 1. 80). According to the other story, the Amazons invaded Athens and were defeated by Theseus, who afterwards married the Amazon Queen, Hippolyta. Perhaps the reason why Shakespeare follows the second story and makes Theseus marry Hippolyta, not Antiopa, is that Chaucer had done so in The Knight's Tale. The names Egeus<sup>2</sup> (really the name of the father of Theseus), Ægle, Perigenia (in the form Perigouna) and Ariadne all occur in Plutarch's Life, which also records the incidents briefly referred to in Act II, sc. 1, ll. 78-80.

There are various indications that Shakespeare had read The Knight's Tale. In the Tale (we noted), as in the play, Hippolyta is the bride of Theseus. The name Philostrate occurs in the Tale (l. 570) as that of the Chamberlain of the court of

<sup>1</sup> Reprinted 1595, 1603, 1612; Shakespeare makes extensive use of this work in Julius Cæsar, Coriolanus and Antony and Cleopatra. Plutarch narrates the lives of celebrated Greek and Roman generals and statesmen.

<sup>2</sup> More correctly Ægeus; cf. Ægean Sea, named after him; for Egeus cf. Chaucer's Legend of Ariadne. 50. "Of Athenes king Egeus."

Theseus, i.e. the official who, like Philostrate in the play, might supervise court-festivities. Part of the action of the Tale takes place in a grove outside the walls of Athens: possibly this suggested to Shakespeare "the wood, a league without the town" (I. I. 165), in which most of the action of the play is laid. In the Tale (ll. 815-838) Theseus is described as very fond of hunting in May: we may compare the hunting-party on May-morning in the play (IV. I. 100). The Tale (ll. 107-169) relates how Theseus attacked Thebes, slew the king Creon, sacked the town, and returned to Athens "With laurel crowned as a conqueror." Perhaps this is the incident referred to in the line "When I from Thebes came last a conqueror" (V. 51). And in one or two passages the Tale has verbal resemblances to the play (cf. I. I. 20, 167, notes).

Shakespeare's indebtedness, as we see, to these two sources, Plutarch's Life and Chaucer's Tale, is very slight. The bare fact that Theseus overthrew the Amazons and married their queen, Hippolyta; a few names and allusions; possibly a few hints from Chaucer: these make up the sum total of Shakespeare's obligations as regards this element of the plot.

IX

"PYRAMUS AND THISBE"

The story of "Pyramus and Thisbe" is told at length in Ovid's Metamorphoses, IV. 55-166. Of the Metamorphoses there was a famous Elizabethan version, in long rhymed couplets, by a Cambridge scholar, Arthur Golding. This translation, first published in 1565 and often reprinted, appears to have been one of Shakespeare's favourite books. To it he probably owed much of his knowledge of classical mythology. It is certainly the main source of the "interlude" of "Pyramus and Thisbe" in A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Shakespeare not only follows Golding's version in the general outline of the facts of the story: there are even some verbal coincidences which show how closely he studied this authority (cf. v. 139, 164, notes).

The original story in Ovid.

Golding's "Ovid" (used by Shakespeare).

Another work on the same subject, also based on Ovid, is Chaucer's Legend of Thisbe of Babylon. Very probably Shakespeare read Chaucer's poem, though it is not possible to trace any indication in the play that he did so. A third version of the story which should be mentioned because it occurs in a well-known

An Elizabethan version of the story known probably to Shakespeare. poetical miscellany of that time is "A New Sonet<sup>1</sup> of Pyramus and Thisbie" in Clement Robinson's A Handful of Pleasant Delights (1584). It is likely that Shakespeare was acquainted with this collection of poems by various writers: the first piece in it bears a decided resemblance to Ophelia's speech, "There's rosemary...There's fennel," in Hamlet, iv. 5. 175-185. The "New Sonet of Pyramus" presents one marked similarity to the "interlude" in A Midsummer-Night's Dream: it contains alliteration (intended seriously) of the extravagant type ridiculed by Shakespeare; cf. for instance the lines:

"And then the beast with his bright blade<sup>2</sup>,
he slew certáin."

Mr Halliwell-Phillipps writes: "The story of Pyramus and Thisbe was very familiar to an Elizabethan audience, not merely in translations of Ovid, but as having been told in prose and verse by numerous English writers of the sixteenth century." The fact that the story<sup>3</sup> was so popular is important. In Shakespeare's telling it becomes intentionally a burlesque; and a burlesque has little point if the thing burlesqued be not familiar.

With the "interlude" we should compare the "entertainment" of the "Nine Worthies" in Love's Labour's Lost. This also was acted by inexpert amateurs—the village schoolmaster, a "swain," a page. No doubt, each—the “interlude” no less than the “entertainment”—is a picture, exaggerated as regards details but in the main true, drawn from contemporary life. Probably the representations given by the Guilds or Trade-Companies furnished hints for each. These representations, performed by tradesmen like the “rude mechanicals” of Athens, with scenery and “properties” not much more elaborate than those of the “interlude,” were usually of a very artless, primitive character. Shakespeare’s own county was famous for its Guild-performances, and at Stratford, not many miles from their great centre, Coventry, he must in his boyhood have known or known of them.

<sup>1</sup> i.e. Sonnet, then used of any short poem.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. v. 147. For the accentuation certáin, common in old ballads and perhaps ridiculed by Shakespeare, cf. v. 231.

<sup>3</sup> Dante refers to it twice—Purgatorio xxvii. 37-39, xxxiii. 69.

What may have suggested it.

Again, there was, it would appear, a good deal of play-acting of an even simpler sort among the Elizabethans. Till the advent of Puritanism, the English working folk (such as Bottom and his friends really are) were singularly fond of anything like a play or pageant. Many of their popular sports and amusements had a certain element of acting, e.g. the “disguises” and “mummings” at Christmas, the “morris-dance” at Whitsuntide, and the “May-day” games. I do not doubt that pieces like the “Nine Worthies” and the “interlude” were acted by village-companies on the great festivals<sup>1</sup>, and that Shakespeare had witnessed such performances as he describes with a touch of exaggeration—perhaps as a boy had taken part in them. There is a vivid reality about the dramatis personæ of the “interlude” which gives the impression of its having been studied and reproduced from the life.

X

“CUPID’S FLOWER”

The third element of the plot—viz. the fortunes of the pairs of lovers—is Shakespeare’s own invention, so far as we know. But the incident of the love-juice, on which so much turns, and which brings

*The Spanish romance
“Diana.”*

<sup>1</sup> Especially Corpus Christi Day, on which the Coventry plays were acted.

the lovers into closer connection with the fairies, is thought to be due to some similar incidents in the Spanish romance Diana, by George of Montemayor (1512-1562). This work is a pastoral novel or romance in prose, with occasional pieces of verse. It had a great reputation<sup>1</sup> and was translated into various languages. The earliest extant English version, by Bartholomew Yong, appeared in 1598. It has been objected that Shakespeare could not have owed anything to a Spanish work not rendered into English till 1598. But the objection has little force. It is almost certain that Shakespeare read Diana before he wrote The Two Gentlemen of Verona; and few critics (if any) would place the date of that play so late as 1598. A piece called The History of Felix and Philomena, based probably upon Diana (in which these names occur), was acted in January 1585. Sidney's<sup>2</sup> Arcadia is said to show unmistakably the influence of Diana. We may safely conclude that Diana was known in England before 1598.

I find in the Preface to Yong's translation (1598) the remark that in rendering Diana he made use of "the French copies." In the Dedication of the volume he names one of these French versions. Now the importation of French and Italian romances into England was a marked feature of the literary history of the time, and it may fairly be assumed that French versions of a romance so widely celebrated as Diana would find their way into this country, and be accessible and intelligible to every Elizabethan Englishman of average education who lived in London (as Shakespeare did for so long). The existence therefore of these French translations of the Spanish romance satisfactorily explains how the work might have become known to Shakespeare and his contemporaries before the appearance of Yong's English translation in 1598.

<sup>1</sup> Milton (Areopagitica) mentions it along with the Arcadia as a work with which everyone might be expected to be acquainted.

<sup>2</sup> Sidney died 1586.

Of course, the notion of a love-juice possessed of magical properties need not in the first instance have been invented by the author of Diana. Such notions belonged to the traditional superstition and mysterious lore of the Middle Ages. They were common property—not the invention of any particular author. Old romances are full of references to herbs<sup>1</sup> having wonderful “virtues.” The particular way, however, in which Shakespeare applies the idea seems to have been suggested by the use which George of Montemayor had previously made of it.

The notion of the love-juice not peculiar to any particular writer

XI

THE FAIRY LORE OF THE PLAY

In the fairy lore of A Midsummer-Night's Dream Shakespeare naturally follows tradition. He takes existing conceptions and beliefs and adapts them to his purpose, uniting the fairy lore of poetry and romance with the fairy lore of popular superstition<sup>3</sup>.

Shakespeare's fairy lore;

The fairy king with his “knights” (II. I. 25), the fairy queen with her “train” of attendant fays, these are figures drawn from the traditional presentment of the fairy community by poets and romance-writers. Spenser’s Faerie Queene, published not long since (1590), had done more than any other English work to bring them into vogue. They represent fairy lore in its literary aspect. They are not the simple conceptions which the superstitious fancy of simple people creates. But Puck is such a conception. He is not the creation of poets: he is a “spirit of another sort”—as it were, country born and bred: the hero of the “old wives’ tales” of homely villagers.

poetic;

popular

<sup>1</sup> Cf. the herb “hæmony” in Milton’s Comus, 629–649.

<sup>2</sup> e.g. works such as Huon of Bordeaux (see p. xxvii).

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Keightley, “the fairy mythology is an attempt to blend the elves of the village with the fays of romance.”

XII

THE FAIRY COURT

The notion of fairy or elf monarchs may be traced in English poetry as far back as Chaucer. Compare the beginning of The Wife of Bath's Tale. In the old days, it says, of King Arthur

The fairy king and queen in Chaucer

"The elf-queen, with her joly compaignye, Dancede ful oft in many a grene mede" (ll. 4, 5).

Compare again The Merchant's Tale, which introduces "Pluto, that is the kyng of fayerye,

And many a lady in his compaignie
Folwyng hys wif, the queene Preserpina" (ll. 983-985).

The Merchant's Tale has two points of resemblance to A Midsummer-Night's Dream: (1) in it—as in the play—there is a dispute between the fairy king and queen; (2) the fairy king intervenes between, and seeks to reconcile, a husband and wife just as Oberon intervenes between and reconciles the lovers. It is scarcely a rash assumption that Shakespeare read this Tale.

*Had Shakespeare
read "The Merchant's Tale"?*

XIII

OBERON AS THE FAIRY KING

When A Midsummer-Night's Dream was written, Oberon had not long been known in English mythology as the fairy king. Chaucer, as we saw, assigned that post to Pluto. Oberon was not native to English mythology. He was introduced from France, being identical with the French Alberon or Auberon. But his German Alberon or Auberon in turn was not French in origin; for he had been introduced into France from German mythology, being identical with the German spirit Alberich or Elferich. Shakespeare's Oberon therefore was originally a German fairy who came into English fairy lore through a French medium.

The German Alberich<sup>1</sup> or Elferich means "Elf-king."

<sup>1</sup> Alberich = Germ. alb, 'elf' + rich, 'king.' With alb cf. Icelandic álfr, Swedish älf, A.S. ælf (whence elf). With rich

Alberich figures in many German fairy tales and legends. For instance, in the Nibelungen-lied it is Alberich who guards the treasure which Siegfried has to win from the Nibelungen. How this elf-king Alberich or Elferich passed from German mythology into French, or by what process the name Alberich or Elferich became in French Auberon (which would soften into Auberon<sup>1</sup>), does not concern us here. Enough that the transition did take place, and that Auberon was an important character in one of the most famous of the many famous French romances that dealt with the life and legends of Charlemagne and his "peers."

Introduced from German into French literature.

This romance was called, from the hero's name, Huon de Bordeaux. Auberon is entitled therein "le Roi du royaume de la féerie." He plays a considerable part in the romance as patron and protector of Huon, with whom he is constantly associated in later writings. In its earliest form Huon de Bordeaux is a verse-romance dating from about the 12th or 13th century. From this verse-romance a prose-romance was afterwards formed. This prose-romance was translated from the French into English by Lord Berners about 1534. The translation<sup>2</sup> was

*Appears in
"Huon de Bordeaux."*

This romance translated into English.

unquestionably the agency by which Auberon—or Oberon, to give him the Anglicised name used throughout by Lord Berners,—was first introduced into English romance and poetry<sup>3</sup> as king of the fairies. And Lord Berners' Book of Duke Huon of Bordeaux had so great a repute that there is certainly a probability that it was known to Shakespeare.

Hence Oberon is introduced into English literature.

cf. Old English riche (whence rich in modern E.), Gothic reiks, Old High Germ. riche, 'powerful'; and modern Germ. reich, 'realm.' Germ. alb and Germ. elf are allied, so that 'Alberich' and 'Elferich' are parallel forms.

<sup>1</sup> So aube, the dawn = Lat. alba. Cf. Brachet's Dict. p. xcvi, "al before a consonant drops to au, as calcare, O.F. caucher."

<sup>2</sup> Reprinted in 1570 and 1601. Several other romances of the Charlemagne series were published by Caxton in English versions.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Spenser, Faerie Queene, II. i. 6, II. 10. 75.

xxviii A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

It illustrates at any rate one point in this play. Shakespeare associates Oberon and Titania with India<sup>1</sup> & their "fairy land" lies evidently in the far East. Now in the romance Oberon is described as "King of Momur," and this mythic fairy realm (we read) is situate a long way east of Jerusalem—somewhere in remote central Asia. The play therefore and the romance coincide in this small point, and I suspect that the association of the fairy monarch with the East was a tradition of fairy lore.

Oberon's fairy realm traditionally (?) placed in the East.
A Midsummer-Night's Dream did not mark Oberon's first introduction on the English stage. One of the characters in Greene's historical play James IV is "Oboram King of Fayeries," attended by a train of fays. This play, though not printed till 1598, is thought to have been written about 1589. Very likely Shakespeare was acquainted with it, though his Oberon bears but slight resemblance to Greene's "Oboram."

XIV

TITANIA AS THE FAIRY QUEEN

Shakespeare calls the fairy queen Titania because that Titania = was a title of the classical goddess Diana<sup>2</sup>, Diana. whom a popular belief of Shakespeare's time identified with the queen of the fairies. There was a general tendency in the Middle Ages to identify fairies and elves with the "nymphs" and "satyrs" of classical mythology. Diana was supposed to be attended by a train of "nymphs," so that when these were regarded as fairies, Diana came to be regarded commonly as the fairy queen. Keightley refers to King James's Demonologie, which speaks of the class of spirits that "by the Gentiles<sup>1</sup> was called Diana and her wandering court [i.e. "nymphs"], and amongst us was called the Phairie<sup>2</sup>" (ed. 1603, p. 56). <sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf. II. I. 22, 69, 124. People were beginning to hear much of India as a land of fabulous wealth. S. refers to it in about twelve passages. The East India Company received its charter in 1600.

<sup>2</sup> Titanus = the sun-god, Titania = Diana as his sister.

Whether Shakespeare was the first to apply the name Titania to the fairy queen I do not know. Chaucer called her Proserpine. In an entertainment performed before Queen Elizabeth when she visited Lord Hertford at Elvetham House in Hampshire, 1591, the fairy queen is introduced as "Aureola<sup>3</sup>." Sometimes "Queen Mab" (Romeo, I. 4. 53) is treated as the fairy sovereign. Other names assigned to the fairy queen.

XV

PUCK OR ROBIN GOODFELLOW

Originally "Puck" was not a proper name. It was "a generic term for a fairy, and we recognise it further in the Icelandic puki, the Irish pooca, the Welsh pwcca, even the Cornish pixie, and the Puk and Niss Puk of the Frisians and Danes<sup>4</sup>." All these allied words meant "elf, sprite." Apparently Shakespeare was the first to use this general term "Puck<sup>5</sup>" as a proper name of the particular sprite commonly called "Robin Goodfellow<sup>6</sup>." This spirit was a conspicuous figure in English and German mythology. His attributes are very similar in both, and his German title "Knecht Ruprecht" corresponds closely with the English "Robin Good- Origin of the name "Puck."
Puck = "Robin Goodfellow" - German "Knecht Ruprecht."

<sup>1</sup> i.e. the Greeks and Romans.

<sup>2</sup> i.e. Fairy, a collective word = fairies (see Glossary).

<sup>3</sup> This, not Titania, is the name given in the account of the entertainment in Nichols' Progresses of Queen Elizabeth.

<sup>4</sup> Chambers' Encyclopædia (1892). Add Scotch pauky, a sprite.

<sup>5</sup> The lines of the play in which the name occurs are II. I. 40, 148; IV. I. 69; V. 438, 442.

<sup>6</sup> Note II. I. 34; III. 2. 355; IV. I. 51, 85; V. 445.

<sup>7</sup> Robin is a French corruption of Robert = Germ. Ruprecht. "Knecht Ruprecht" was a favourite character in German comedies of the 16th and 17th centuries.

fellow." He was also known in England as the "Hobgoblin" (cf. II. I. 40)—Hob being merely a corruption of Robin. The character which Shakespeare assigns to him as that of a freakish "sprite," now mischievous, now friendly, less polished and dainty than the "elves" or "fairies," is drawn from popular tradition.

Thus Puck is a spirit who helps in, or (if displeased) interferes with, domestic duties (II. I. 36-38). Cf. Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft<sup>1</sup> (1584): "Robin good fellowe...would supplie the office of servants, specialle maids; as to make a fier in the morning, sweepe the house<sup>2</sup>, grind<sup>3</sup> mustard and malt."

Illustrations of the traditional conception of his character

Cf. also Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, which mentions those spirits "called with us hobgoblins, and Robin goodfellows that would...grind<sup>3</sup> corn" (1806 ed., I. 68).

Puck takes different shapes, especially the form of some animal, generally with the object of frightening people or making them fall into ridiculous mistakes, or of deceiving animals (II. I. 45-52, III. I. 111-114). The old Life of Robin Goodfellow (printed 1628) records many adventures which turn entirely upon his power of transforming himself, now into a horse, now into a dog, and so on. The notion is very common in fairy tales. The power was not peculiar to Puck.

Puck misleads<sup>4</sup> travellers (II. I. 39) at night by means of a false light (III. I. 112), called by the Germans an elf-light. Keightley says that in Devonshire "Pixy-led" meant 'led astray by a spirit' (i.e. a "puck"); and that in Worcestershire "Poake-ledden" had the same sense. This notion too is wide-spread.

<sup>1</sup> Nicholson's Reprint, p. 437. The Discoverie (i.e. 'uncovery,' exposure of, witchcraft) is the standard English work of that time on current superstition and myth. No doubt, Shakespeare was acquainted with it. Reginald Scot wrote against superstitions of all sorts.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Act v. II. 396, 397 (note).

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Act II. I. 36 ("labour in the quern").

<sup>4</sup> This custom was common to a whole class of spirits such as Will-o'-the-Wisp and Jack-o'-Lantern.

XVI

CHARACTERISATION OF THE FAIRIES OF THE PLAY

Gervinus says: "Airy and swift, like the moon, the fairies circle the earth; they avoid the sunlight without fearing it, and seek the darkness; they love the moon, and dance in her beams; and above all they delight in the dusk and twilight, the very season for dreams, whether waking or sleeping. They send and bring dreams to mortals; and we need only recall to mind the description of Queen Mab in Romeo and Juliet to discover that this is the charge essentially assigned to them, and the very means by which they influence mortals.

The manner in which Shakespeare has fashioned their inner character in harmony with this outward function is full of profound thought. He depicts them as beings without delicate feeling and without morality. Careless and unscrupulous, they tempt mortals to infidelity; the effects of the mistakes which they have contrived make no impression on their minds; they feel no sympathy for the deep afflictions of the lovers, but only delight and marvel over their mistakes and their foolish demeanour. The poet further depicts his fairies as beings of no high intellectual development. Whoever attentively reads their parts will find that nowhere is reflection imparted to them. Only in one exception does Puck make a sententious remark upon the infidelity of man, and whoever has penetrated into the nature of these beings will immediately feel that it is out of harmony. They can make no direct inward impression upon mortals; their influence over the mind is not spiritual, but throughout material; it is effected by means of vision, metamorphosis, and imitation. Titania has no spiritual association with her friend, but mere delight in her beauty, her 'swimming gait,' and her powers of imitation. When she awakes from her vision there is no scene or reconciliation with her husband...no trace of reflection, no indication of feeling....

They are represented, these little gods, as natural souls, without the higher human capacities of mind, lords of a kingdom, not of reason and morality, but of imagination and ideas conveyed by the senses; and thus they are uniformly the vehicle of the fancy which produces the delusions of love and dreams. Their will, therefore, only extends to the corporeal. They lead a luxurious, merry life, given up to the pleasures of the senses; the secrets of nature and the powers of flowers and herbs are confided to them. To sleep in flowers, lulled with dances and songs, with the wings of painted butterflies to fan the moonbeams from their eyes, this is their pleasure; the gorgeous apparel of flowers and dewdrops is their joy....

This life of sense and nature is seasoned by the power of fancy, and by desire after all that is most choice, most beautiful, and agreeable. They harmonise with nightingales and butterflies; they wage war with all ugly creatures, with hedgehogs, spiders, and bats; dancing, play, and song are their greatest pleasures; they steal lovely children, and substitute changelings; they torment decrepit old age, toothless gossips, and the awkward company of the players of Pyramus and Thisbe, but they love and recompense all that is pure and pretty.... The only pain which agitates these beings is jealousy.... They are full of wanton tricks and raileries, playing upon themselves and upon mortals pranks which never hurt, but which often torment. This is especially the property of Puck."

XVII

"A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM" AND "THE TEMPEST"

It is natural to compare the fairies of A Midsummer-Night's Dream with the "spirits" of The Tempest. The supernatural beings of the two plays present, no doubt, certain resemblances; but there are essential differences between them—notably these: "

"Firstly, the fairies of this play are the superiors of "the human mortals" on whom they exercise their power uncontrolled. In The Tempest, on the other hand, man at his highest development, as represented by Prospero, is the

The two main points of contrast.

superior. The spirit world lies subject to him. The spirits do his bidding. They resemble forces of nature whose secrets man has mastered. The fairy Oberon is supreme over man in the one piece: the man Prospero is supreme over spirits in the other.

Secondly, the fairies of A Midsummer-Night's Dream, as I have endeavoured to show, are traditional conceptions: Oberon and Titania in one way, Puck in another. They are not essentially the creations of the poet. They represent existing material which he found ready to hand and re-wrought—rough sketches, so to speak, which the artist touched to finer issues, adding and removing something, yet preserving the original outlines and character. But the spirits of The Tempest are essentially Shakespeare's own conception and creation; and comparison of Puck with Ariel must, I think, start from this basis, that Puck is the product of popular superstition refined, but not recreated, by Shakespeare's imagination, while Ariel is the pure outcome of that imagination, unaffected by external influences.

XVIII

SOME CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PLAY

I have said that A Midsummer-Night's Dream has much resemblance to a Masque. In the Masque Characteristics of the Masque. the slender story (told mostly in rhyme) was fanciful—often allegorical. The characters were almost always supernatural beings, drawn, as a rule, from classical mythology. The locality was some classical or purely ideal region. The chief interest lay in the spectacle and scenic effects. Much music, and many graceful dances, were introduced. All these in Resemblance of this play to a Masque. a greater or lesser degree are features of A Midsummer-Night's Dream<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> The fairy parts of the play, represented with adequate scenery and accompanied by Mendelssohn's incidental music, furnish a good notion of an Elizabethan or Jacobean Masque-performance.

An important element of the Masque was the "Anti-Masque." This was a comic underplot or Two-fold purpose of the "interlude": "interlude" designed to be a contrast to, and parody of, the main plot. The "interlude" in A Midsummer-Night's Dream is a kind of "Anti-Masque." Dramatically, the main purpose that (1) as a contrast; it fulfils is contrast. The clowns serve as opposites to the fairies and to the heroic figures of Theseus and his courtiers. Puck watching the rehearsal in Act III: Titania twining her arms round Bottom's neck: could the effect of contrast achieve more? And when Quince and his company are set amid the brilliance of the palace the contrast is scarcely less striking.

Further, the subject-matter of the "interlude" is almost (2) as a parody. a parody of the love-element in the previous Acts. The humorous extravagance of love is laid bare for the edification of the pairs of lovers. They look on and laugh: and their laugh is against themselves. In Pyramus and Thisbe they see themselves unconsciously very much as others have seen them.

Only the names in the play are Greek: else it has nothing classical about it: it is essentially romantic and Elizabethan. Theseus reminds us of some heroic of mediæval romance, or great Elizabethan noble such as Shakespeare's early patron Southampton. Philostrate is an Elizabethan Master of the Revels. The clowns have worked for bread on Warwickshire, not Athenian, stalls. The lovers might bear English names. The hunting-party and hounds would be appropriate in the setting of an English landscape: indeed the scene is English with its setting of English trees and flowers (II. I. 249-252, III. I. 169, 170). May-day customs and the like (e.g. "carols and the "nine men's The play romantic, not classical. morris") are introduced or mentioned with entire disregard of time. In modern dramas and works of fiction so much attention is paid to correctness of detail that Shakespeare's laxity appears at first a little strange. But his way was the Elizabethan way. Poets took classical themes and adapted them to a modern setting, careless of the confusion that resulted from the union of old and new.

XIX

SOME CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY

The characterisation of A Midsummer-Night's Dream is very slight. It is to some extent a comedy of The characters. confusions and cross-purposes like the Comedy of Errors, where the interest depends on incident. Elaborate character-drawing would not harmonise with the fanciful tone. A study of character like Hamlet could Mainly conventional. have no place in a "Dream." Given unconventional circumstances, the dramatis personæ may be conventional; indeed, through contrast with their surroundings, they are more effective. So Shakespeare uses familiar types, and only distinguishes them by very simple means—if at all.

Of the fairies something has been said: of the "human mortals" of the play there is little to say. Demetrius and Lysander. Demetrius and Lysander belong to a familiar class of lover and are practically undistinguishable. Remove the names from their speeches and you could seldom tell which was the speaker. They are neither original nor individual figures. Hermia and Helena. Hermia and Helena, if less alike, are equally commonplace. Place either beside the masterly creations in the later, maturer comedies—beside Rosalind in As You Like It or Beatrice in Much Ado—and how conventional, how lacking in originality, does she show by the contrast! Over their respective lovers, indeed, they have just this advantage—they are distinguished, though very simply. Thus Hermia<sup>1</sup> is short and dark-complexioned: Helena<sup>2</sup> tall and fair. Hermia is sharp of tongue, a very "vixen": Helena gentle, "never curst," a "right maid" for her yielding, timid spirit. So we cannot confuse them: but it needed no Shakespeare to conceive and depict such characters. The only human figures really touched with his genius are Theseus and Bottom.

<sup>1</sup> Note especially III. 2. 257, 263, 288-298, 323-330.

<sup>2</sup> Note especially III. 2. 288-298, 300-305.

Theseus represents (in Dowden's very just criticism) "Shakespeare's early ideal of a heroic warrior and man of action." Not by what he does (for he has very little to do), but by his presence, he creates an impression of greatness and strength—strength of mind, will, body. He has the self-centred serenity of strength, the calmness of conscious power. No crisis would evoke from him the fret and excitement of weaker natures. All who come into contact with him defer to his authority. None attempts to question his word or cross his purpose. Not that there is aught of the overbearing tyrant in him. Rather, he has a full measure of the gentle considerateness innate in many men of his strong masterful type. In his attitude, for example, towards the interlude-players how much more courteous and forbearing is he than his bride. No wounding word of disparagement drops from his lips; and when he thanks them at the end they go away well pleased that their "duke" has been so pleased. His speech "The kinder we" etc. (v. 89-105) is very characteristic of the graciousness of his strong nature. Equally interesting as an illustration of character is his criticism of playwrights and players, "The best in this kind" etc. (v. 213). For him all acting, however good, is of little account because unreal—a make-believe and mere "shadow" of life. The motto of such men is deeds, not words—fact, not fancy. And so Theseus depreciates imagination with something of the intolerance of the man of action for whom the humblest bit of life, of actual experience, has infinitely more value than the finest fiction. One could wish that the play presented more scope of action for this strong, heroic king of men.

Bottom is more fortunate. Prominence is not denied him. He struts the stage a very embodiment of self-assertive conceit. He is one of those village tyrants who chancing to be a little cleverer than their fellows are looked up to as more than mortal. Bottom's supremacy is so unquestioned, greatness is so thrust upon him by his associates, that self-assertion became his ruling passion, a second nature. He must push himself to the front: it is his destiny. Every episode in the play in which he takes part serves to illustrate his assurance and egotism. Thus, he would dearly like to play the chief parts in the "interlude": failing that, he orders his friends about, makes alterations in the piece as seems to him good, and generally assumes the dignity, though not the labours, of the post of manager which Quince nominally fills. His self-complacency does not desert him in the unexpected presence of the fairy queen: he can still "gleek," and as for the members of her train, they soon learn whose bidding they are to perform. Titania herself must be still, and he would sleep. Afterwards he will have Peter Quince make a ballad of his adventures that he, the hero, may reap fresh glory. And he ends by correcting the duke himself (v. 185-188). There is a singular completeness about Bottom's self-conceit: it is never marred by a lapse into modesty: it holds its course unfaltering—combined (and this is very true to life) with the utmost good temper and a complete absence of a sense of humour. But observe that it is not proof against flattery: vanity has always its weak side, and a deft compliment from Quince gets round him (i. 2. 88).

XX

"SHAKESPEARE'S FIRST MASTERPIECE"

In A Midsummer-Night's Dream "it<sup>1</sup> is not in its dramatic elements that we recognise the master-hand, but rather in the rich and incomparable lyric poetry with which Shakespeare embroiders a thin dramatic canvas. His first masterpiece is a masterpiece of grace, both lyrical and comic. A Midsummer-Night's Dream was no doubt written as a festival-play or masque.... How is one to speak adequately of it? It is idle to dwell upon the slightness of the characterisation, for the poet's effort is not after characterisation; and the poem as a whole is one of the tenderest, most original, and most perfect

<sup>1</sup> From Dr Brandes' William Shakespeare, A Critical Study (1898), i. 76, 77.

Shakespeare ever produced. It is Spenser's fairy-poetry developed and condensed; it is Shelley's spirit-poetry anticipated by more than two centuries. And the airy dream is shot with whimsical parody. The frontiers of Elf-land and Clown-land meet and mingle.

We have here an element of aristocratic distinction in the princely couple, Theseus and Hippolyta, and their court. We have here an element of sprightly burlesque in the artisans' performance of Pyramus and Thisbe, treated with genial irony and divinely felicitous humour. And here, finally, we have the element of supernatural poetry, which soon after flashes forth again in Romeo and Juliet, where Mercutio describes the doings of Queen Mab. Puck and Pease-blossom, Cobweb and Mustard-seed—pigmies who hunt the worms in a rosebud, tease bats, chase spiders, and lord it over nightingales—are the actors in an elfin play, a fairy carnival of inimitable mirth and melody, steeped in a midsummer atmosphere of mist-wreaths and flower-scents<sup>1</sup>, under the afterglow that lingers through the sultry night. This miracle of happy inspiration contains the germs of innumerable romantic achievements in England, Germany, and Denmark, more than two centuries later.

We have here no pathos. The hurricane of passion does not as yet sweep through Shakespeare's work. No; it is only the romantic and imaginative side of love that is here displayed"—the "fancy" which idealises its object (v. 1.

<sup>1</sup> Dr Brandes remarks on the great number of references in the play to flowers, fruits, animal life. "The rustic and popular element in Shakespeare's genius here appears more prominently than ever before. The country-bred youth's whole feeling for and knowledge of nature come to the surface." And these references intensify the English flavour of the whole play: "the wood" (i. 1. 165) outside Athens may be the Forest of Arden of Shakespeare's own county, and the elves are the "little people" of the English woodland, in whom all country-folk then believed, more or less. In fact, among Shakespeare's works, Midsummer-N. D. is essentially the play of English scenery as Henry V is, I think, essentially the play of English character; see p. li.

10, 11) and in the duke's eyes makes the lover akin to the poet and the madman:

"Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends.
The lunatic, the lover, and the poet
Are of imagination all compact."

XXI

THE STORY OF THE PLAY

The following is the story of the play in Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare. The young student (for whose benefit primarily it is inserted) should note that the Tale deals mainly with the fairy-element and strange fortunes of the lovers, and omits the part of the "interlude," and the marriage of Theseus. The Tale retains much of the language of the play, and a good many of the words in it are explained in the Notes. See the Index for them.

There was a law in the city of Athens which gave to its citizens the power of compelling their daughters to marry whomsoever they pleased: for upon a daughter's refusing to marry the man her father had chosen to be her husband, the father was empowered by this law to cause her to be put to death; but as fathers do not often desire the death of their own daughters, even though they do happen to prove a little refractory, the law was seldom or never put in execution, though perhaps the young ladies of that city were not unfrequently threatened by their parents with the terrors of it.

There was one instance, however, of an old man, whose name was Egeus, who actually did come before Theseus (at that time the reigning duke of Athens), to complain that his daughter Hermia, whom he had commanded to marry Demetrius, a young man of a noble Athenian family, refused to obey him, because she loved another young Athenian, named Lysander. Egeus demanded justice of Theseus, and desired that the cruel law might be put in force against his daughter.

Hermia pleaded in excuse for her disobedience, that Demetrius had formerly professed love for her dear friend Helena, and that Helena loved Demetrius to distraction; but this honourable reason, which Hermia gave for not obeying her father's command, moved not the stern Egeus.

Theseus, though a great and merciful prince, had no power to alter the laws of his country; therefore he could only give Hermia four days to consider of it: and at the end of that time, if she still refused to marry Demetrius, she was to be put to death.

When Hermia was dismissed from the presence of the duke, she went to her lover Lysander, and told him the peril she was in, and that she must either give him up and marry Demetrius, or lose her life in four days.

Lysander was in great affliction at hearing these evil tidings; but recollecting that he had an aunt who lived at some distance from Athens, and that at the place where she lived the cruel law could not be put in force against Hermia (this law not extending beyond the boundaries of the city), he proposed to Hermia that she should steal out of her father's house that night, and go with him to his aunt's house, where he would marry her. "I will meet you," said Lysander, "in the wood a few miles without the city; in that delightful wood where we have so often walked with Helena in the pleasant month of May."

To this proposal Hermia joyfully agreed; and she told no one of her intended flight but her friend Helena. Helena (as maidens will do foolish things for love) very ungenerously resolved to go and tell this to Demetrius, though she could hope no benefit from betraying her friend's secret, but the poor pleasure of following her faithless lover to the wood; for she well knew that Demetrius would go thither in pursuit of Hermia.

The wood, in which Lysander and Hermia proposed to meet, was the favourite haunt of those little beings known by the name of Fairies.

Oberon the king, and Titania the queen, of the fairies, with all their tiny train of followers, in this wood held their midnight revels.

Between this little king and queen or sprites there happened, at this time, a sad disagreement; they never met by moonlight in the shady walks of this pleasant wood, but they were quarrelling, till all their fairy elves would creep into acorn-cups and hide themselves for fear.

The cause of this unhappy disagreement was Titania's refusing to give Oberon a little changeling boy, whose mother had been Titania's friend; and upon her death the fairy queen stole the child from its nurse, and brought him up in the woods.

The night on which the lovers were to meet in this wood, as Titania was walking with some of her maids of honour, she met Oberon attended by his train of fairy courtiers.

"Ill met by moonlight, proud Titania," said the fairy king. The queen replied, "What, jealous Oberon, is it you? Fairies, skip hence; I have forsworn his company." "Tarry, rash fairy," said Oberon; "am not I thy lord? Why does Titania cross her Oberon? Give me your little changeling boy to be my page."

"Set your heart at rest," answered the queen; "your whole fairy kingdom buys not the boy of me." She then left her lord in great anger. "Well, go your way," said Oberon: "before the morning dawns I will torment you for this injury."

Oberon then sent for Puck, his chief favourite and privy counsellor.

Puck (or as he was sometimes called, Robin Goodfellow) was a shrewd and knavish sprite, that used to play comical pranks in the neighbouring villages; sometimes getting into the dairies and skimming the milk, sometimes plunging his light and airy form into the butter-churn, and while he was dancing his fantastic shape in the churn, in vain the dairy-maid would labour to change her cream into butter: nor had the village swains any better success; whenever Puck chose to play his freaks in the brewing copper, the ale was sure to be spoiled. When a few good neighbours were met to drink some comfortable ale together, Puck would jump into the bowl of ale in the likeness of a roasted crab, and when some old goody was going to drink, he would bob against her lips, and spill the ale over her withered chin; and presently after, when the same old dame was gravely seating herself to tell her neighbours a sad and melancholy story, Puck would slip her three-legged stool from under her, and down toppled the poor old woman, and then the old gossips would hold their sides and laugh at her, and swear they never wasted a merrier hour.

"Come hither, Puck," said Oberon to this little merry wanderer of the night; "fetch me the flower which maids call Love in Idleness; the juice of that little purple flower laid on the eyelids of those who sleep, will make them, when they awake, dote on the first thing they see. Some of the juice of that flower I will drop on the eyelids of my Titania when she is asleep; and the first thing she looks upon when she opens her eyes she will fall in love with, even though it be a lion or a bear, a meddling monkey, or a busy ape; and before I will take this charm from off her sight, which I can do with another charm I know of, I will make her give me that boy to be my page."

Puck, who loved mischief to his heart, was highly diverted with this intended frolic of his master, and ran to seek the flower; and while Oberon was waiting the return of Puck, he observed Demetrius and Helena enter the wood: he overheard Demetrius reproaching Helena for following him, and after many unkind words on his part, and gentle expostulations from Helena, reminding him of his former love and professions of true faith to her, he left her (as he said) to the mercy of the wild beasts, and she ran after him as swiftly as she could.

The fairy king, who was always friendly to true lovers, felt great compassion for Helena; and perhaps, as Lysander said, they used to walk by moonlight in this pleasant wood, Oberon might have seen Helena in those happy times when she was beloved by Demetrius. However that might be, when Puck returned with the little purple flower, Oberon said to his favourite, "Take a part of this flower: there has been a sweet Athenian lady here, who is in love with a disdainful youth; if you find him sleeping, drop some of the love-juice in his eyes, but contrive to do it when she is near him, that the first thing he sees when he awakes may be this despised lady. You will know the man by the Athenian garments which he wears." Puck promised to manage this matter very dexterously: and then Oberon went, unperceived by Titania, to her bower, where she was preparing to go to rest. Her fairy bower was a bank, where grew wild thyme, cowslips, and sweet violets, under a canopy of wood-bine, musk-roses, and eglantine. There Titania always slept some part of the night; her coverlet the enamelled skin of a snake, which, though a small mantle, was wide enough to wrap a fairy in.

He found Titania giving orders to her fairies, how they were to employ themselves while she slept. "Some of you," said her majesty, "must kill cankers in the musk-rose buds, and some wage war with the bats for their leathern wings, to make my small elves coats; and some of you keep watch that the clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, come not near me: but first sing me to sleep." Then they began to sing this song:

"You spotted snakes with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blind-worms do no wrong,
Come not near our Fairy Queen.
Philomel, with melody,
Sing in our sweet lullaby,
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby;
Never harm, nor spell, nor charm,
Come our lovely lady nigh;
So good night with lullaby."

When the fairies had sung their queen asleep with this pretty lullaby, they left her to perform the important services she had enjoined them. Oberon then softly drew near his Titania, and dropped some of the love-juice on her eyelids, saying,—

"What thou seest when thou dost wake,
Do it for thy true-love take."

But to return to Hermia, who made her escape out of her father's house that night, to avoid the death she was doomed to for refusing to marry Demetrius. When she entered the wood, she found her dear Lysander waiting for her, to conduct her to his aunt's house; but before they had passed half through the wood, Hermia was so much fatigued, that Lysander, who was very careful of this dear lady, who had proved her affection for him even by hazarding her life for his sake, persuaded her to rest till morning on a bank of soft moss, and lying down himself on the ground at some little distance, they soon fell fast asleep. Here they were found by Puck, who seeing a handsome young man asleep, and perceiving that his clothes were made in the Athenian fashion, and that a pretty lady was sleeping near him, concluded that this must be the Athenian maid and her disdainful lover whom Oberon had sent him to seek; and he naturally enough conjectured that, as they were alone together, she must be the first thing he would see when he awoke; so, without more ado, he proceeded to pour some of the juice of the little purple flower into his eyes. But it so fell out, that Helena came that way, and, instead of Hermia, was the first object Lysander beheld when he opened his eyes; and, strange to relate, so powerful was the love-charm, all his love for Hermia vanished away, and Lysander fell in love with Helena.

Had he first seen Hermia when he awoke, the blunder Puck committed would have been of no consequence, for he could not love that faithful lady too well; but for poor Lysander to be forced by a fairy love-charm to forget his own true Hermia, and to run after another lady, and leave Hermia asleep quite alone in a wood at midnight, was a sad chance indeed.

Thus this misfortune happened. Helena, as has been before related, endeavoured to keep pace with Demetrius when he ran away so rudely from her; but she could not continue this unequal race long, men being always better runners in a long race than ladies. Helena soon lost sight of Demetrius; and as she was wandering about, dejected and forlorn, she arrived at the place where Lysander was sleeping. "Ah!" said she, "this is Lysander lying on the ground: is he dead or asleep?" Then, gently touching him, she said, "Good sir, if you are alive, awake." Upon this Lysander opened his eyes, and (the love-charm beginning to work) immediately addressed her in terms of extravagant love and admiration; telling her she as much excelled Hermia in beauty as a dove does a raven, and that he would run through fire for her sweet sake; and many more such lover-like speeches. Helena, knowing Lysander was her friend Hermia's lover, and that he was solemnly engaged to marry her, was in the utmost rage when she heard herself addressed in this manner; for she thought (as well she might) that Lysander was making a jest of her. "Oh!" said she, "why was I born to be mocked and scorned by every one? Is it not enough, is it not enough, young man, that I can never get a sweet look or a kind word from Demetrius; but you, sir, must pretend in this disdainful manner to court me? I thought, Lysander, you were a lord of more true gentleness." Saying these words in great anger, she ran away; and Lysander followed her, quite forgetful of his own Hermia, who was still asleep.

When Hermia awoke, she was in a sad fright at finding herself alone. She wandered about the wood, not knowing what was become of Lysander, or which way to go to seek for him. In the mean time Demetrius, not being able to find Hermia and his rival Lysander, and fatigued with his fruitless search, was observed by Oberon fast asleep. Oberon had learnt by some questions he had asked of Puck, that he had applied the love-charm to the wrong person's eyes; and now, having found the person first intended, he touched the eyelids of the sleeping Demetrius with the love-juice, and he instantly awoke; and the first thing he saw being Helena, he, as Lysander had done before, began to address love-speeches to her; and just at that moment Lysander, followed by Hermia (for through Puck's unlucky mistake it was now become Hermia's turn to run after her lover) made his appearance; and then

xlvi A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

I love you. Go with me, and I will give you fairies to attend upon you."

She then called four of her fairies: their names were Pease-blossom, Cobweb, Moth, and Mustard-seed.

"Attend," said the queen, "upon this sweet gentleman; hop in his walks, and gambol in his sight; feed him with grapes and apricots, and steal for him the honey-bags from the bees. Come, sit with me," said she to the clown, "and let me play with your amiable hairy cheeks, my beautiful ass! and kiss your fair large ears, my gentle joy!"

"Where is Pease-blossom?" said the ass-headed clown, not much regarding the fairy queen's courtship, but very proud of his new attendants.

"Here, sir," said little Pease-blossom.

"Scratch my head," said the clown. "Where is Cobweb?"

"Here, sir," said Cobweb.

"Good Mr. Cobweb," said the foolish clown, "kill me the red humble-bee on the top of that thistle yonder; and, good Mr. Cobweb, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, Mr. Cobweb, and take care the honey-bag break not; I should be sorry to have you overflown with a honey-bag. Where is Mustard-seed?"

"Here, sir," said Mustard-seed: "what is your will?"

"Nothing," said the clown, "good Mr. Mustard-seed; but to help Mr. Pease-blossom to scratch: I must go to a barber's, Mr. Mustard-seed, for methinks I am marvellous hairy about the face."

"My sweet love," said the queen, "what will you have to eat? I have a venturous fairy shall seek the squirrel's hoard, and fetch you some new nuts."

"I had rather have a handful of dried pease," said the clown, who with his ass's head had got an ass's appetite. "But, I pray, let none of your people disturb me, for I have a mind to sleep."

"Sleep, then," said the queen, "and I will wind you in my arms. O how I love you! how I dote upon you!"

When the fairy king saw the clown sleeping in the arms of his queen, he advanced within her sight, and reproached her with having lavished her favours upon an ass.

This she could not deny, as the clown was then sleeping within her arms, with his ass's head crowned by her with flowers.

When Oberon had teased her for some time, he again demanded the changeling-boy; which she, ashamed of being discovered by her lord with her new favourite, did not dare to refuse him.

Oberon, having thus obtained the little boy he had so long wished for to be his page, took pity on the disgraceful situation into which, by his merry contrivance, he had brought his Titania, and threw some of the juice of the other flower into her eyes; and the fairy queen immediately recovered her senses, and wondered at her late dotage, saying how she now loathed the sight of the strange monster.

Oberon likewise took the ass's head from off the clown, and left him to finish his nap with his own fool's head upon his shoulders.

Oberon and his Titania being now perfectly reconciled, he related to her the history of the lovers, and their midnight quarrels; and she agreed to go with him and see the end of their adventures.

The fairy king and queen found the lovers and their fair ladies, at no great distance from each other, sleeping on a grass-plot; for Puck, to make amends for his former mistake, had contrived with the utmost diligence to bring them all to the same spot, unknown to each other, and he had carefully removed the charm from off the eyes of Lysander with the antidote the fairy king gave to him.

Hermia first awoke, and finding her lost Lysander asleep so near her, was looking at him and wondering at his strange inconstancy. Lysander presently opening his eyes, and seeing his dear Hermia, recovered his reason, which the fairy charm had before clouded, and with his reason, his love for Hermia; and they began to talk over the adventures of the night, doubting if these things had really happened, or if they had both been dreaming the same bewildering dream.

1      A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

Helena and Demetrius were by this time awake; and a sweet sleep having quieted Helena's disturbed and angry spirits, she listened with delight to the professions of love which Demetrius still made to her, and which, to her surprise as well as pleasure, she began to perceive were sincere.

These fair night-wandering ladies, now no longer rivals, became once more true friends; all the unkind words which had passed were forgiven, and they calmly consulted together what was best to be done in their present situation. It was soon agreed that, as Demetrius had given up his pretensions to Hermia, he should endeavour to prevail upon her father to revoke the cruel sentence of death which had been passed against her. Demetrius was preparing to return to Athens for this friendly purpose, when they were surprised with the sight of Egeus, Hermia's father, who came to the wood in pursuit of his runaway daughter.

When Egeus understood that Demetrius would not now marry his daughter, he no longer opposed her marriage with Lysander, but gave his consent that they should be wedded on the fourth day from that time, being the same day on which Hermia had been condemned to lose her life; and on that same day Helena joyfully agreed to marry her beloved and now faithful Demetrius.

The fairy king and queen, who were invisible spectators of this reconciliation, and now saw the happy ending of the lovers' history, brought about through the good offices of Oberon, received so much pleasure, that these kind spirits resolved to celebrate the approaching nuptials with sports and revels throughout their fairy kingdom.

And now, if any are offended with this story of fairies and their pranks, as judging it incredible and strange, they have only to think that they have been asleep and dreaming, and that all these adventures were visions which they saw in their sleep: and I hope none of my readers will be so unreasonable as to be offended with a pretty harmless Midsummer Night's Dream.

ADDENDA

What was said, inadequately, in previous editions as to the "English" quality of A Midsummer-Night's Dream may now (1918) be supplemented by some remarks<sup>1</sup> of a poet-critic who makes this feature of the play the special feature of his appreciation:

"Shakespeare attained to all the spiritual powers of the English. He made a map of the English character. We have not yet passed the frontiers of it. It is one of his humanities that the English country, which made him, always meant much to him, so that now, wherever his works go, something of the soul of that country goes too, to comfort exiles over the sea. Man roams the world, wandering and working; but he is not enough removed from the beasts to escape the prick in the heart that turns the tired horse homeward, and sets the old fox padding through the woods to die near the earth where he was whelped. Shakespeare's heart always turned for quiet happiness to the country where he lived as a boy. In this play, he turned not to the squires and farm-folk, but to the country itself, and to those genii of the country, the fairies, believed in, and often seen by country people, and revered by them as the cause of mishaps.... All the earth of England is consecrated by the intense memories of the English. In this play Shakespeare set himself free to tell his love of the earth of England that had ministered to his mind with beauty through the days of youth. Walking in the Cotswold country, when

'russet-pated choughs, many in sort
Rising and cawing at the gun's report,
Sever themselves and mad<sup>ly</sup> sweep the sky,' gives to the passenger a sense of the enduringness of the pageant upon which those seeing eyes looked more than three centuries ago."

<sup>1</sup> Reproduced, by kind permission of the publishers, from Mr Masfield's William Shakespeare (a treasure-house of beautiful criticism) in the "Home University Library" (Williams and Norgate).

The following extract is from the edition published (1924) in The New Shakespeare (Cambridge University Press):

"Commentators have remarked that Bottom takes his name from the 'bottom' or cōre of the skein upon which the weaver's yarn is wound; but they have not noticed that most of the other clowns have technical names likewise<sup>1</sup>. Thus Quince is simply a spelling of 'quines' or 'quoins,' i.e. wedge-shaped blocks of wood used for building purposes, and therefore appropriately connected with a carpenter; Snout means nozzle or spout...which suggests the tinker's trade in mending kettles; Snug means 'compact, close-fitting, tight'—a good name for a joiner; and Flute, the bellows-mender, would of course have to repair fluted church-organs as well as the domestic bellows. Starveling, indeed, is the only non-technical name among them, though it is apt enough, alluding as it does to the proverbial leanness of tailors, of whom it took 'nine to make a man'."

A reference is added to "Francis Feeble," the woman's tailor, in 2 Hen. IV, III. 2. 158-172.

Tailors might well be starved if they could not get their bills paid (As You Like It, v. 4. 47, 48, Cymbeline, III. 3. 24-26).

<sup>1</sup> No doubt, this explanation is correct; but it may, I think, be combined with that given on p. 78. Some of the characters might be chosen, or "made up," so as to look like their names.

A

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

THESEUS, duke of Athens.

EGEUS, father to Hermia.

LYSANDER, }
DEMETRIUS, } in love with Hermia.

PHILOSTRATE, master of the revels to Theseus.

QUINCE, a carpenter.

SNUG, a joiner.

BOTTOM, a weaver.

FLUTE, a bellows-mender.

SNOUT, a tinker.

STARVELING, a tailor.

HIPPOLYTA, queen of the Amazons, betrothed to Theseus.

HERMIA, daughter to Egeus, in love with Lysander.

HELENA, in love with Demetrius.

OBERON, king of the fairies.

TITANIA, queen of the fairies.

PUCK, or Robin Goodfellow.

PEASE-BLOSSOM, }
COBWEB, } fairies.
MOTH, }
MUSTARD-SEED, }

PYRAMUS, }
THISBE, } characters in the interlude performed
WALL, } by the Clowns.
MOONSHINE, } LION, }

Other fairies attending their King and Queen.

Attendants on Theseus and Hippolyta.

SCENE

Athens, and a wood near it.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

ACT I

SCENE I. Athens. The palace of THESEUS

Enter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, PHILOSTRATE, and Attendants

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon: but, O, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires,
Like to a step-dame, or a dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue.

Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in night;
Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow
New-bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. 10

The. Go, Philostrate,
Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments;
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth:
Turn melancholy forth to funerals;
The pale companion is not for our pomp. [Exit Philostrate]
Hippolyta, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling.

Enter EGEUS, HERMIA, LYSANDER, and DEMETRIUS

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke! 20

The. Thanks, good Egeus: what's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.
Stand forth, Demetrius. My noble lord,

This man hath my consent to marry her.
 Stand forth, Lysander: and, my gracious duke,
 This man hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child:
 Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes,
 And interchang'd love-tokens with my child:

30 Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
 With feigning voice, verses of feigning love;
 And stolen the impression of her fantasy
 With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
 Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats,—messengers
 Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth:
 With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughter's heart;
 Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me,
 To stubborn harshness: and, my gracious duke,
 Be it so she will not here before your Grace

40 Consent to marry with Demetrius,
 I beg the ancient privilege of Athens,
 As she is mine, I may dispose of her:
 Which shall be either to this gentleman
 Or to her death, according to our law
 Immediately provided in that case.

The. What say you, Hermia? be advis'd, fair maid
 To you your father should be as a god;
 One that compos'd your beauties; yea, and one
 To whom you are but as a form in wax

50 By him imprinted, and within his
~~To leave the figure, or d~~
 Demetrius ~~is~~ a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

The. In himself he is;
 But in this kind, wanting your father's voice,
 The other must be held the worthier.

Her. I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

The. Rather your eyes must with his judgment look.

Her. I do entreat your Grace to pardon me.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
 60 Nor how it may concern my modesty,

In such a presence here to plead my thoughts;
But I beseech your Grace that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the society of men.
Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.
Thrice-blessed they that master so their blood
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage;
But earthlier happy is the rose distill'd
Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies in single blessedness.

70

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

80

The. Take time to pause; and, by the next new moon,—
The sealing-day betwixt my love and me,
For everlasting bond of fellowship,—
Upon that day either prepare to die
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest
For aye austerity and single life.

90

Dem. Relent, sweet Hermia: and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

Ege. Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my love,
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she is mine, and all my right of her

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM [ACT I

I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
 100 As well possess'd; my love is more than his;
 My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
 If not with vantage, as Demetrius';
 And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
 I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia:
 Why should not I, then, prosecute my right?
 Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,
 Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
 And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes,
 Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
 110 Upon this spotted and inconstant man.

The. I must confess that I have heard so much,
 And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
 But, being over-full of self-affairs,
 My mind did lose it. But, Demetrius, come;
 And come, Egeus; you shall go with me,
 I have some private schooling for you both.
 For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
 To fit your fancies to your father's will;
 Or else the law of Athens yields you up—
 120 Which by no means we may extenuate—
 To death, or to a vow of single life.
 Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love?
 Demetrius and Egeus, go along:
 I must employ you in some business
 Against our nuptial; and confer with you
 Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

Ege. With duty and desire we follow you.

[Exeunt all but Lysander and Hermia]

Lys. How now, my love! why is your cheek so pale?
 How chance the roses there do fade so fast?
 130 Herm. Belike for want of rain, which I could well
 Beteem them from the tempest of mine eyes.

Lys. Ay me! for aught that ever I could read,
 Could ever hear by tale or history,

The course of true love never did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood,—

Her. O cross! too high to be enthralld to low!

Lys. Or else misgrafted in respect of years,—

Her. O spite! too old to be engag'd to young!

Lys. Or else it stood upon the choice of friends,—

Her. O hell! to choose love by another's eyes! 140

Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say, "Behold!"
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion.

Her. If, then, true lovers have been ever cross'd, 150
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross,
As due to love as thoughts, and dreams, and sighs,
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Lys. A good persuasion: therefore, hear me, Hermia.
I have a widow aunt, a dowager

Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
From Athens is her house remote seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son. 160
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us. If thou lov'st me, then,
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night;
And in the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance to a morn of May,
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander!
I swear to thee, by Cupid's strongest bow;

170 By his best arrow with the golden head;
 By the simplicity of Venus' doves;
 By that which knitteth souls and prospers loves;
 And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
 When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
 By all the vows that ever men have broke,
 In number more than ever women spoke;
 In that same place thou hast appointed me,
 To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

Lys. Keep promise, love. Look, here comes Helena.

Enter HELENA

180 Her. God speed fair Helena! whither away?

Hel. Call you me fair? that fair again unsay.

Demetrius loves your fair: O happy fair!

Your eyes are lode-stars; and your tongue's sweet air

More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear,

When wheat is green, when hawthorn-buds appear.

Sickness is catching: O, were favour so,

Yours would I catch, fair Hermia! ere I go,

My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye,

My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.

190 Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,

The rest I'll give to be to you translated.

O, teach me how you look; and with what art

You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart!

Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.

Hel. O, that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill!

Her. I give him curses, yet he gives me love.

Hel. O, that my prayers could such affection move!

Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me.

Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me.

200 Her. His folly, Helena, is no fault of mine.

Hel. None, but your beauty: would that fault were mine!

Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face;

Lysander and myself will fly this place,
Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens as a paradise to me:
O, then, what graces in my love do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven unto a hell!

Lys. Helen, to you our minds we will unfold:
To-morrow night, when Phœbe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watery glass
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,—
A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal,—
Through Athens' gates have we devis'd to steal.

Her. And in the wood, where often you and I
Upon faint primrose-beds were wont to lie,
Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet,
There my Lysander and myself shall meet;
And thence from Athens turn away our eyes,
To seek new friends and stranger companies.
Farewell, sweet playfellow: pray thou for us;
And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius!
Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight
From lovers' food till morrow deep midnight.

Lys. I will, my Hermia. [Exit Hermia]

Helena, adieu:

As you on him, Demetrius dote on you! [Exit]

Hel. How happy some o'er other some can be!
'Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
He will not know what all but he do know:
And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes,
So I, admiring of his qualities.
Things base and vile, holding no quantity,
Love can transpose to form and dignity:
Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind:
Nor hath Love's mind of any judgment taste;
Wings, and no eyes, figure unheedy haste:
And therefore is Love said to be a child,

Because in choice he is so oft beguil'd.

- 240 As waggish boys in game themselves forswear,
 So the boy Love is perjur'd every where:
 For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eyne,
 He hail'd down oaths that he was only mine;
 And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt,
 So he dissolv'd, and showers of oaths did melt.
 I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight:
 Then to the wood will he to-morrow night
 Pursue her; and for this intelligence
 If I have thanks, it is a dear expense:
 150 But herein mean I to enrich my pain,
 To have his sight thither and back again.

[Exit]

SCENE II. Athens. QUINCE's house

Enter QUINCE, SNUG, BOTTOM, FLUTE, SNOUT, and STARVELING

Quin. Is all our company here?

Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the scrip.

Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and the duchess on his wedding-day at night.

Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors; and so grow to a point.

Quin. Marry, our play is The most lamentable comedy and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.

Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry. Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer as I call you. Nick Bottom, the weaver.

20 Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.

Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move storms, I will condole in some measure. To the rest: yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could 30 play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all snlit.

The raging rocks
And shivering shocks
Shall break the locks
Of prison-gates;
And Phibbus' car
Shall shine from far,
And make and mar
The foolish Fates.

40

This was lofty! Now name the rest of the players. This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condoling.

Quin. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.

Flu. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. You must take Thisby on you.

Flu. What is Thisby? a wandering knight?

Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.

Flu. Nay, faith, let not me play a woman; I have a beard coming. 50

Quin. That's all one: you shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.

Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too: I'll speak in a monstrous little voice, "Thisne, Thisne;" "Ah, Pyramus, my lover dear! thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!"

Quin. No, no; you must play Pyramus: and, Flute, you Thisby.

Bot. Well, proceed.

Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.

60

Star. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother. Tom Snout, the tinker.

Snout. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. You, Pyramus' father; myself, Thisby's father; Snug, the joiner, you, the lion's part: and, I hope, here is a play fitted.

Snug. Have you the lion's part written? pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.

70 Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.

Bot. Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say, "Let him roar again," let him roar again."

Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek; and that were enough to hang us all.

80 All. That would hang us, every mother's son.

Bot. I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 'twere any nightingale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus; for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper man as one shall see in a 90 summer's day; a most lovely, gentleman-like man: therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

Bot. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.

100 Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play barefaced. But, masters, here are your parts: and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to con them by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace-wood, a mile without the town, by moonlight: there will we rehearse,—for if we meet in the city, we shall be dogged with company, and our devices known. In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, fail me not.

Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse most obscenely and courageously. Take pains; be perfect: adieu.

Quin. At the duke's oak we meet.

Bot. Enough; hold, or cut bow-strings. [Exeunt

ACT II

SCENE I. A wood near Athens

Enter, from opposite sides, a Fairy, and PUCK

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Fai. Over hill, over dale,

Thorough bush, thorough brier,

Over park, over pale,

Thorough flood, thorough fire,

I do wander every where,

Swifter than the moon's sphere;

And I serve the fairy queen,

To dew her orbs upon the green

The cowslips tall her pensioners be:

In their gold coats spots you see;

Those be rubies, fairy favours,

In those freckles live their savours:

I must go seek some dewdrops here,

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

Farewell, thou lob of spirits; I'll be gone:

Our queen and all her elves come here anon.

Puck. The king doth keep his revels here to-night:

Take heed the queen come not within his sight;

For Oberon is passing fell and wrath,

Because that she, as her attendant, hath 10

20

14 A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king;
 She never had so sweet a changeling:
 And jealous Oberon would have the child
 Knight of his train, to trace the forests wild;
 But she perforce withholds the loved boy,
 Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her joy:
 And now they never meet in grove or green,
 By fountain clear or spangled starlight sheen,
 30 But they do square, that all their elves, for fear,
 Creep into acorn-cups, and hide them there.

Fai. Either I mistake your shape and making quite,
 Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite Call'd Robin Goodfellow: are not you he
 That frights the maidens of the villagery;
 Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,
 And bootless make the breathless housewife churn;
 And sometime make the drink to bear no barm;
 Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?
 40 Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
 You do their work, and they shall have good luck:
 Are not you he?

Puck. Thou speak'st aright;
 I am that merry wanderer of the night.
 I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
 When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
 Neighing in likeness of a filly foal:
 And sometime lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
 In very likeness of a roasted crab;
 And when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
 50 And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale.
 'The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,
 Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me;
 Then slip I from her, [and] down topples she,
 And "tailor" cries, and falls into a cough;
 And then the whole quire hold their hips and laugh,
 And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and swear
 A merrier hour was never wasted there.

But, room, fairy! here comes Oberon.

Fai. And here my mistress. Would that he were gone!

Enter, from one side, OBERON, with his Train; from the other TITANIA, with hers

Obe. Ill met by moonlight, proud Titania. 60

Tita. What, jealous Oberon! Fairies, skip hence:
I have forsworn his bed and company.

Obe. Tarry, rash wanton: am not I thy lord?

Tita. Then I must be thy lady: but I know
When thou hast stolen away from fairy land,
And in the shape of Corin sat all day,
Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love
To amorous Phyllida. Why art thou here,
Come from the farthest steep of India?

at, forsooth, the bouncing Amazon, 70
Your buskin'd mistress and your warrior love,
To Theseus must be wedded, and you come
To give their bed joy and prosperity.

Obe. How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolyta,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
Didst thou not lead him through the glimmering night
From Perigenia?

And make him with fair Æglé break his faith,
With Ariadne and Antiopa? 80

Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy:
And never, since the middle summer's spring,
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paved fountain or by rushy brook,
Or in the beached margent of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.
(Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea
Contagious fogs; which, falling in the land,
Have every pelted river made so proud,

That they have overborne their continents:
 The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,
 The ploughman lost his sweat; and the green corn
 Hath rotted ere his youth attain'd a beard:
 The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
 And crows are fatted with the murrion flock;
 The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud;
 And the quaint mazes in the wanton green,
 100 For lack of tread, are undistinguishable:
 The human mortals want their winter here;
 No night is now with hymn or carol blest:
 Therefore the moon, the governess of floods,
 Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
 That rheumatic diseases do abound:
 And thorough this distemperature we see
 The seasons alter: (hoary-headed frosts
 Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose;
 And on old Hiems' thin and icy crown
 11 An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds
 Is, as in mockery, set) the spring, the summer,
 The childing autumn, angry winter, change
 Their wonted liveries; and the mazed world,
 By their increase, now knows not which is which:
 And this same progeny of evils comes
 From our debate, from our dissension;
 We are their parents and original.
Obe. Do you amend it, then; it lies in you:
 Why should Titania cross her Oberon?
 I do but beg a little changeling boy,
 To be my henchman.

Tita. Set<sup>r</sup> your heart at rest:
 The fairy land buys not the child of me.
His mother was a votaress of my order: ?
 And, in the spiced Indian air, by night,
 Full often hath she gossip'd by my side;
 And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
 Marking the embarked traders on the flood;

When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive
And grow big-bellied with the wanton wind;
Which she with pretty and with swimming gait 130
Would imitate, and sail upon the land,
To fetch me trifles, and return again,
As from a voyage, rich with merchandise.
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And for her sake I do rear up her boy;
And for her sake I will not part with him.

Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?

Tita. Perchance till after Theseus' wedding-day.
If you will patiently dance in our round, 140
And see our moonlight revels, go with us;
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.

Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom. Fairies, away!
We shall chide downright, if I longer stay.

[Exit Titania with her Train]

Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this grove
Till I torment thee for this injury.

My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou remember'st
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back, 150
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember

Obe. That very time I saw—but thou couldst not—Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throned by the west,
And loos'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts: 160
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial votaress passed on,

In maiden meditation, fancy-free.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell:

It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidens call it love-in-idleness.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee once:

170 The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees.
Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again
Ere the leviathan can swim a league.

Puck. I'll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes.

[Exit

Obe. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes.
The next thing then she waking looks upon,
180 Be it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
On meddling monkey or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love:
And ere I take this charm off from her sight,—
As I can take it with another herb,— I'll make her render up her page to me.
But who comes here? I am invisible;
And I will overhear their conference. )

Enter DEMETRIUS, HELENA following him

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander and fair Hermia?

190 The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me.
Thou told'st me they were stolen into this wood;
And here am I, and wood within this wood,
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.
Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more.

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant;
But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw,

And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? do I speak you fair?

Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth

200

Tell you I do not nor I cannot love you?

Hel. And even for that do I love you the more.

I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,

The more you beat me, I will fawn on you:

Use me but as your spaniel, spurn me, strike me,

Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave,

Unworthy as I am, to follow you.

What worser place can I beg in your love,—

And yet a place of high respect with me,—

Than to be used as you use your dog?

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit;

For I am sick when I do look on thee.

Hel. And I am sick when I look not on you.

Dem. You do impeach your modesty too much,

To leave the city, and commit yourself

Into the hands of one that loves you not;

To trust the opportunity of night,

And the ill counsel of a desert place,

With the rich worth of your virginity.

Hel. Your virtue is my privilege: for that

It is not night when I do see your face,

Therefore I think I am not in the night;

Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company.

For you in my respect are all the world:

Then how can it be said I am alone,

When all the world is here to look on me?

Dem. I'll run from thee and hide me in the b

And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts.

Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you.

Run when you will, the story shall be chang'd:

230

Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase;

The dove pursues the griffin; the mild hind

Makes speed to catch the tiger,—bootless speed,

When cowardice pursues, and valour flies!

I will not stay thy questions; let me go:
Or, if thou follow me, do not believe
But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.

Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,
You do me mischief. Fie, Demetrius!

240 Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex:
We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be woo'd, and were not made to woo.

[Exit Demetrius
I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell, borrow { To die upon the hand I love so well. [Exit

Obe. Fare thee well, nymph: ere he do leave this grove,
Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.

Re-enter PUCK

Hast thou the flower there? Welcome, wanderer.

Puck. Ay, there it is.

Obe. I pray thee, give it me.

I know a bank where the wild thyme blows,
250 Where ox-lips and the nodding violet grows;
Quite over-canopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine:
There sleeps Titania sometime of the night,
Lull'd in these flowers with dances and delight;
And there the snake throws her enamell'd skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in:
And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes,
And make her full of hateful fantasies.
Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove:
260 A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it when the next thing he espies
May be the lady: thou shalt know the man
'By the Athenian garments he hath on.
Effect it with some care, that he may prove
More fond on her than she upon her love:
And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow.

Puck. Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do so.

[Exeunt

SCENE II. Another part of the wood

Enter TITANIA, with her Train

Tita. Come, now a roundel and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
Some to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds;
Some war with rere-mice for their leathern wings,
To make my small elves coats; and some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots and wonders
At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices, and let me rest.

SONG

First Fairy. You spotted snakes with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blind-worms, do no wrong,
Come not near our fairy queen.--

CHORUS

Philomel, with melody
Sing in our sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby:
Never harm,
Nor spell nor charm,
Come our lovely lady nigh,
So, good night, with lullaby.

Second Fairy. Weaving spiders come not here;
Hence, you long-legg'd spinners, hence!
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm nor snail, do no offence.

CHORUS

Philomel, with melody, &c.

First Fairy. Hence, away! now all is well:
One aloof stand sentinel.

[Exeunt Fairies. Titania sleeps

Enter OBERON

Obe. What thou see'st when thou dost wake,
[Squeezes the flower on Titania's eyelids
Do it for thy true-love take;
Love and languish for his sake:
    'tis it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When thou wak'st, it is thy dear:
Wake when some vile thing is near.

[Exit]

Enter LYSANDER and HERMIA

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood;
And, to speak troth, I have forgot our way:
We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.

Her. Be it so, Lysander: find you out a bed;
40 For I upon this bank will rest my head.

Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both;
One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one troth.

Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear, Lie further off yet, do not lie so near.

Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence!
Love takes the meaning in love's conference.
I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit,
So that but one heart we can make of it:
Two bosoms, interchained with an oath;
50 So then two bosoms and a single troth.
Then by your side no bed-room me deny;
For lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.

Her. Lysander riddles very prettily:
Now much beshrew my manners and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied.
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
Lie further off; in human modesty,
Such separation as may well be said

Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid,
 So far be distant; and, good night, sweet friend: 60
 Thy love ne'er alter till thy sweet life end!

Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I;
 And then end life when I end loyalty! ♪
 Here is my bed: sleep give thee all his rest!

Her. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be press'd!
[They sleep]

Enter PUCK

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,
 But Athenian found I none,
 On whose eyes I might approve
 This flower's force in stirring love.
 Night and silence! who is here? 70
 Weeds of Athens he doth wear:
 This is he my master said
 Despised the Athenian maid;
 And here the maiden, sleeping sound,
 On the dank and dirty ground.
 Pretty soul! she durst not lie
 Near this lack-love, this kill-courtesy.
 Churl, upon thy eyes I throw [Squeezes the flower on Lysander's eyelids]
 All the power this charm doth owe.
 When thou wak'st, let love forbid 80
 Sleep his seat on thy eyelid:
 So awake when I am gone;
 For I must now to Oberon. [Exit]

Enter DEMETRIUS and HELENA, running

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.

Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.

Hel. O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.

Dem. Stay, on thy peril: I alone will go. [Exit]

Hel. O, I am out of breath in this fond chase!
 The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.

90 Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies;
 For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.
 How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt tears:
 If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than hers.
 No, no, I am as ugly as a bear;
 For beasts that meet me run away for fear:
 Therefore no marvel though Demetrius
 Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.
 What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
 Made me compare with Hermia's sphery eyne?
 100 But who is here? Lysander! on the ground!
 Dead? or asleep? I see no blood, no wound.
 Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.

Lys. [Starting up] And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.

Transparent Helena! Nature shows art,
 That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.
 Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
 Is that vile name to perish on my sword!

Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.
 What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?
 110 Yet Hermia still loves you: then be content.

Lys. Content with Hermia: No; I do repent
 The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
 Not Hermia but Helena I love:
 Who will not change a raven for a dove?
The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
 And reason says you are the worthier maid.
 Things growing are not ripe until their season:
 So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason
 And touching now the point of human skill, 120 Reason becomes the marshal to my will,
 And leads me to your eyes, where I o'erlook
Love's stories written in love's richest book;

Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?
 When at your hands did I deserve this scorn?
 Is't not enough, is't not enough, young man,

That I did never, no, nor never can,
 Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,
 But you must flout my insufficiency?
 Good troth, you do me wrong,—good sooth, you do,—
 In such disdainful manner me to woo. 130

But fare you well: perforce I must confess
 I thought you lord of more true gentleness.
O, that a lady, of one man refus'd,
Should of another therefore be abus'd! [Exit

Lys. She sees not Hermia. Hermia, sleep thou there:
 And never mayst thou come Lysander near!
 For as a surfeit of the sweetest things
 The deepest loathing to the stomach brings;
 Or as the heresies that men do leave hated most of those they did deceive; 140

 So thou, my surfeit and my heresy,
 Of all be hated, but the most of me!

And, all my powers, address your love and might
 To honour Helen, and to be her knight! [Exit

Her. [Awaking] Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best

To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast!

Ay me, for pity! what a dream was here!

Lysander, look how I do quake with fear:

145 I thought a serpent eat my heart away,

And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. 150

Lysander! what, remov'd? Lysander! lord!

What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?

Alack, where are you? speak, an if you hear;

Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.

? then I well perceive you are not nigh:

either death or you I'll find immediately. [Exit

ACT III

SCENE I. The wood. Titania lying asleep

Enter QUINCE, SNUG, BOTTOM, FLUTE, SNOUT, and STARVELING

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn-brake our tiring-house; and we will do it in action as we will do it before the duke.

Bot. Peter Quince,—

Quin. What say'st thou, bully Bottom?

Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and 10 Thisby that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

By'r lakin, a p l

Star. I believe we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

Bot. Not a whit: I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus 20 is not killed indeed; and, for the more better assurance, tell them that I Pyramus am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver: this will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six.

Bot. No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afeard of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

30 Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in,—God shield us!—a lion among ladies is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion living; and we ought to look to it.

Snout. Therefore another prologue must tell he is not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same defect,—"Ladies,"—or, "Fair ladies,—I would wish you,"—or, 40 "I would request you,"—or, "I would entreat you,—not to fear, not to tremble; my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: no, I am no such thing; I am a man as other men are:" and there, indeed, let him name his name, and tell them plainly, he is Snug the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things,—that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; for, you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight. 50

Snug. Doth the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanac; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then may you leave a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of 60 thorns and a lanthorn, and say he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of Moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snug. You can never bring in a wall. What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present Wall: and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some rough- 70 cast about him, to signify wall; and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin; when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue.

Enter PUCK behind dressed in origin very white

Puck. What hempen home-spuns have we swaggering here,

80 | So near the cradle of the fairy queen?

| What, a play toward! I'll be an auditor;

An actor too perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus. Thisby, stand forth.

Pyr. Thisby, the flowers of odious savours sweet,—

Quin. "Odours, odours."

Pyr. — odours savours sweet:

So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby dear.

But hark, a voice! stay thou but here awhile,

And by and by I will to thee appear.

[Exit

90 | Puck. A stranger Pyramus than e'er play'd here.

[Aside, and exit

This. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.

This. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,

Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,

Most brisby juvenal, and eke most lovely Jew,

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire,

I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb.

100 | Quin. "Ninus' tomb," man: why, you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus: you speak all your part at once, cues and all. Pyramus, enter: your cue is past; it is, "never tire."

This. O,—As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Re-enter PUCK, and BOTTOM with an ass's head

Pyr. If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thine:—

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted. Pray, masters! fly, masters! Help!

[Exeunt Quince, Snug, Flute, Snout, and Starveling Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round, Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier: 110

Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. [Exit **Bot.* Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them to make me afeard.

Re-enter SNOUT

Snout. O Bottom, thou art changed! what do I see on thee?

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass-head of your own, do you? [Exit Snout 120

Re-enter QUINCE

*Quin.** Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated. [Exit

Bot. I see their knavery: this is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can: I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

Heil black bird [Sings

The ousel-cock so black of hue,

With orange-tawny bill,

The throstle with his note so true,

The wren with little quill,— pipe . 130

Tita. [Awaking] What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

Bot. [Sings]

The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,

The plain-song cuckoo gray,

Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dares not answer nay;—

30 A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM [ACT III

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird?
who would give a bird the lie, though he cry "cuckoo" never so?

140 Tita. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:
Mine ear is much enamour'd of thy note;
So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape;
And thy fair virtue's force perforce doth move me,
On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days; the more the pity that some honest neighbours will not make them friends.

150 Nay, I can glee upon occasion.

Tita. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tita. Out of this wood do not desire to go:
Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.
I am a spirit of no common rate:

The summer still doth tend upon my state;
And I do love thee: therefore, go with me;

160 I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee;
And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,
And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:
And I will purge thy mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.
Pease-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustard-seed!

Enter PEASE-BLOSSOM, COBWEB, MOTH, and MUSTARD-SEED

Peas. Ready.

Cob. And I.

Moth. And I.

Mus. And I.

All Four. Where shall we go?

Tita. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman;
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes;

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries;
The honey-bags steal from the humble-bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes,
To have my love to bed and to arise;
And pluck the wings from painted butterflies
To fan the moonbeams from his sleeping eyes:
Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

Peas. Hail, mortal!

Cob. Hail!

Moth. Hail!

Mus. Hail!

180

Bot. I cry your worships mercy, heartily. I beseech your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Cobweb: if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you. Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas. Pease-blossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to Mistress Squash, your mother, and to Master Peascod, your father. Good Master Pease-blossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too. Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mus. Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good Master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house: I promise you your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Mustard-seed.

Tita. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower.

The moon methinks looks with a watery eye;
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.

Tie up my love's tongue, bring him silently. [Exeunt

SCENE II. Another part of the woodEnter OBERON

Obe. I wonder if Titania be awak'd;
 Then, what it was that next came in her eye,
 Which she must dote on in extremity.
 Here comes my messenger.

Enter PUCK

How now, mad spirit!

What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.
 Near to her close and consecrated bower,
 While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,
 A crew of patches, rude mechanicals,
 10 That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
 Were met together to rehearse a play,
 Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day.
 The shallowest thickskin of that barren sort,
 Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
 Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake:
 When I did him at this advantage take,
 An ass's nole I fixed on his head:
 Anon his Thisbe must be answered,
 And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,
 20 As wild geese that the creeping fowler eye,
 Or russet-pated choughs, many in sort,
 Rising and cawing at the gun's report,
 Sever themselves and madly sweep the sky;
 So, at his sight, away his fellows fly;
 And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls;
 He murder cries, and help from Athens calls.
 Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong,
 Made senseless things begin to do them wrong;
 For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch;
 30 Some, sleeves,—some, hats;—from yielders all things catch.

I led them on in this distracted fear,
And left sweet Pyramus translated there:
When in that moment, so it came to pass,
Titania wak'd, and straightway lov'd an ass.

Obe. This falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?

Puck. I took him sleeping,—that is finish'd too,—
And the Athenian woman by his side;
That, when he wak'd, of force she must be ey'd. 40

Enter HERMIA and DEMETRIUS

Obe. Stand close: this is the same Athenian.

Puck. This is the woman, but not this the man.

Dem. O, why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.

Her. Now I but chide; but I should use thee worse,
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.

The sun was not so true unto the day 50
As he to me: would he have stolen away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon
This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon
May through the centre creep, and so displease
Her brother's noontide with the Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look,—so dead, so grim.

Dem. So should the murder'd look; and so should I Pierc'd through the heart with your stern cruelty:
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.

Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.

Her. Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds

Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him, then?

Henceforth be never number'd among men!

O, once tell true, tell true, even for my sake!

Durst thou have look'd upon him being awake,

70 And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!

Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?

An adder did it; for with doubler tongue

Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Dem. You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood:

I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;

Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.

Her. I pray thee, tell me, then, that he is well.

Dem. An if I could, what should I get therefore?

Her. A privilege, never to see me more;

And from thy hated presence part I so:

See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein:

Here therefore for a while I will remain.

So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow

For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;

Which now in some slight measure it will pay,

If for his tender here I make some stay.

[Lies down and sleeps]

Obe. What hast thou done? thou hast mistaken quite,

And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight:

Of thy misprision must perforce ensue

Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

Puck. Therè fate o'er-rules, that, one man holding troth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.

Obe. About the wood so swifter than the wind,

And Helena of Athens how thou find:

All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer

With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear:

By some illusion see thou bring her here:

I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.

Puck. I go, I go; look how I go,
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow.

[Exit]

Obe. Flower of this purple dye,
 Hit with Cupid's archery,
     [Squeezes the flower on Demetrius's eyelids]
 Sink in apple of his eye.
 When his love he doth espy,
 Let her shine as gloriously
 As the Venus of the sky.
 When thou wak'st, if she be by,
 Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter PUCK

Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
 Helena is here at hand;
 And the youth, mistook by me,
 Pleading for a lover's fee.
 Shall we their fond pageant see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!
 Obe. Stand aside: the noise they make
 Will cause Demetrius to awake.
 Puck. Then will two at once woo one;
 That must needs be sport alone;
 And those things do best please me
 That befall preposterously. &c.

Enter HELENA and LYSANDER

Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
 Scorn and derision never come in tears:
 Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
 How can these things in me seem scorn to you,
 Bearing the badge of faith, to prove them true?
 Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
 When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray!
 These vows are Hermia's: will you give her o'er?
 Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:
 Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
 Will even weigh; and both as light as tales.

Lys. I had no judgment when to her I swore.

Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.

Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Dem. [Awaking] O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!

To what, my love, shall I compare thine eyne?

Crystal is muddy. O, how ripe in show

Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!

That pure congealed white, high Taurus' snow,

Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crow

When thou hold'st up thy hand: O, let me kiss

This princess of pure white, this seal of bliss!

Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent

To set against me for your merriment:

If you were civil and knew courtesy,

You would not do me thus much injury.

Can you not hate me, as I know you do,

150 But you must join in souls to mock me too?

If you were men, as men you are in show,

You would not use a gentle lady so;

To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,

When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.

You both are rivals, and love Hermia;

And now both rivals, to mock Helena:

A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,

To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes

With your derision! none of noble sort

160 Would so offend a virgin, and extort

A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind. Demetrius; be not so;

For you love Hermia; thus you know I know:

And here, with all good will, with all my heart,

In Hermia's love I yield you up my part;

And yours of Helena to me bequeath,

Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia; I will none:

If e'er I lov'd her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn'd,
And now to Helen is it home return'd,
There to remain. 170

Lys. Helen, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it dear.
Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

Re-enter HERMIA

• Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The ear more quick of apprehension makes;
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompense. 180
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so?

Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?

Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him bide,
Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all yon fiery oes and eyes of light.
Why seek'st thou me? could not this make thee know,
The hate I bear thee made me leave thee so? 190

Her. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!
Now I perceive they have conjoin'd all three
To fashion this false sport in spite of me.
Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid!
Have you conspir'd, have you with these contriv'd
To bait me with this foul derision?
Is all the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty-footed time
For parting us,—O, is all forgot?
All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence:
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,

Have with our needles created both one flower,
 Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
 Both warbling of one song, both in one key;
 As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
 Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,

210 But yet a union in partition;
 Two lovely berries moulded on one stem;
 So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
 Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
 Due but to one, and crowned with one crest.
 And will you rent our ancient love asunder,
 To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
 It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly:
 Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it,
 Though I alone do feel the injury.

220 Her. I am amazed at your passionate words.
 I scorn you not: it seems that you scorn me.

Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn
 To follow me, and praise my eyes and face?
 And made your other love, Demetrius,
 Who even but now did spurn me with his foot,
 To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
 Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
 To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
 Deny your love, so rich within his soul,

230 And tender me, forsooth, affection,
 But by your setting on, by your consent?
 What though I be not so in grace as you,
 So hung upon with love, so fortunate,
 But miserable most, to love unlov'd?
 This you should pity rather than despise.

Her. I understand not what you mean by this.

Hel. Ay, do, persevere, counterfeit sad looks;
 Make mouths upon me when I turn my back;
 Wink each at other; hold the sweet jest up:
 240 This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.

If you have any pity, grace, or manners,
 You would not make me such an argument.
 But fare ye well: 'tis partly mine own fault;
 Which death or absence soon shall remedy.

Lys. Stay, gentle Helena; hear my excuse:
 My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!

Hel. O excellent!

Her. Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel.

Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
 Thy threats have no more strength than her weak prayers. 250

Helen, I love thee; by my life, I do:

I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
 To prove him false that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say I love thee more than he can do.

Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come!

Her. Lysander, whereto tends all this?

Lys. Away, you Ethiop!

Dem. No, no, sir;

Seem to break loose, come on as you would follow,
 But yet come not: you are a tame man, go!

Lys. Hang off, thou cat, thou burr! vile thing, let loose, 260
 Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent!

Her. Why are you grown so rude? what change is this,
 Sweet love?

Lys. Thy love! out, tawny Tartar, out!
 Out, loathed medicine! hated potion, hence!

Her. Do you not jest?

Hel. Yes, sooth! and so do you.

Lys. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.

Dem. I would I had your bond, for I perceive
 A weak bond holds you: I'll not trust your word

Lys. What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?
 Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so. 270

Her. What, can you do me greater harm than hate?
 Hate me! wherefore? O me! what news, my love?

Am not I Hermia? are not you Lysander?
 I am as fair now as I was erewhile.
 Since night you lov'd me; yet since night you left me:
 Why, then you left me,—O, the gods forbid!—
 In earnest, shall I say?

Lys. Ay, by my life;

And never did desire to see thee more.

Therefore be out of hope, of question, of doubt;

280 Be certain, nothing truer; 'tis no jest

That I do hate thee, and love Helena.

Her. O me! you juggler! you canker-blossom!
 You thief of love! what, have you come by night
 And stolen my love's heart from him?

Hel. Fine, i'faith!

Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
 No touch of bashfulness? What, will you tear
 Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?
 Fie, fie! you counterfeit, you puppet, you!

Her. Puppet! why so? ay, that way goes the game.
 290 Now I perceive that she hath made compare Between our statures; she hath urg'd her height;
 And with her personage, her tall personage,
 Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him.
 And are you grown so high in his esteem,
 Because I am so dwarfish and so low?
 How low am I, thou painted maypole? speak;
 How low am I? I am not yet so low
 But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
 300 Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;
 I have no gift at all in smewishness;
 I am a right maid for my cowardice:
 Let her not strike me. You perhaps may think,
 Because she's something lower than myself,
 That I can match her.

Her. Lower! hark, again.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.

I evermore did love you, Hermia,
 Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong'd you;
 Save that, in love unto Demetrius,
 I told him of your stealth unto this wood. 310
 He follow'd you; for love I follow'd him;
 But he hath chid me hence, and threaten'd me
 To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too:
 And now, so you will let me quiet go,
 To Athens will I bear my folly back,
 And follow you no further: let me go:
 You see how simple and how fond I am.

Her. Why, get you gone: who is't that hinders you?

Hel. A foolish heart, that I leave here behind.

Her. What, with Lysander?

Hel. With Demetrius. 320

Lys. Be not afraid; she shall not harm thee, Helena.

Dem. No, sir, she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O, when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd!
 She was a vixen when she went to school;
 And though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little again! nothing but low and little!
 Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
 Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf;
 You minimus, of hindering knot-grass made;
 You bead, you acorn.

Dem. You are too officious 330
 In her behalf that scorns your services.
 Let her alone: speak not of Helena;
 Take not her part; for, if thou dost intend
 Never so little show of love to her,
 Thou shalt aby it.

Lys. Now she holds me not;
 Now follow, if thou dar'st, to try whose right,
 Of thine or mine, is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow! nay, I'll go with thee, cheek by jole.

[Exeunt Lysander and Demetrius]

Her. You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you:
Nay, go not back.

340 Hel. I will not trust you, I,
Nor longer stay in your curst company.
Your hands than mine are quicker for a fray;
My legs are longer though, to run away. [Exit

Her. I am amaz'd, and know not what to say. [Exit

Obe. This is thy negligence: still thou mistak'st,
Or else committ'st thy knaveries wilfully.

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.
Did not you tell me I should know the man
By the Athenian garments he had on?
350 And so far blameless proves my enterprise,
That I have 'nointed an Athenian's eyes;
And so far am I glad it so did sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou see'st these lovers seek a place to fight:
Hie therefore, Robin, overcast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon
With drooping fog, as black as Acheron;
And lead these testy rivals so astray,
As one come not within another's way.
360 Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;
And from éach other look thou lead them thus,
- Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep
With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep:
Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property,
To take from thence all error with his might,
And make his eyeballs roll with wonted sight.
370 When they next wake, all this derision
Shall seem a dream and fruitless vision,
And back to Athens shall the lovers wend,
With league whose date till death shall never end.
Whiles I in this affair do theé employ,

I'll to my queen and beg her Indian boy;
And then I will her charmed eye release
From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste,
For Night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger; 380
At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,
Troop home to churchyards: damned spirits all,
That in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone;
For fear lest day should look their shames upon,
They wilfully themselves exile from light,
And must for aye consort with black-brow'd night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort:
I with the Morning's love have oft made sport;
And, like a forester, the groves may tread, 390
Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams,
Turns into yellow gold his salt-green streams.
But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay:
We may effect this business yet ere day. [Exit

Puck. Up and down, up and down,
I will lead them up and down:
I am fear'd in field and town:
Goblin, lead them up and down

Here comes one. 400

Re-enter LYSANDER

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

Puck. Here, villain, drawn and ready. Where art thou?

Lys. I will be with thee straight.

Puck. Follow me, then,
To plainer ground. [Exit Lysander, as following the voice

Re-enter DEMETRIUS

Dem. Lysander! speak again:
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?

44 A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM [ACT III

Speak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Come, <sup>Tenderly follow</sup> ~~recreant~~, come, thou child;
410 I'll whip thee with a rod: he is defil'd
That draws a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea, art thou there?

Puck. Follow my voice: we'll try no manhood here.

[Exeunt]

Re-enter LYSANDER

Lys. He goes before me and still dares me on:
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
The villain is much lighter-heel'd than I:
I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;
That fall'n am I in dark uneven way,
And here will rest me. [Lies down.] Come, thou gentle day!
For if but once thou show me thy gray light,
420 I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite. [Sleeps]

Re-enter PUCK and DEMETRIUS

Puck. Ho, ho, ho! Coward, why com'st thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st; for well I wot
Thou runn'st before me, shifting every place,
And dar'st not stand, nor look me in the face.
Where art thou now?

Puck. Come hither: I am here.

Dem. Nay, then, thou mock'st me. Thou shalt this dear,

If ever I thy face by daylight see:
Now, go thy way. Faintness constraineth me
To measure out my length on this cold bed.
430 By day's approach look to be visited.

[Lies down and sleeps]

Re-enter HELENA

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,
Abate thy hours! Shine comforts from the east,

That I may back to Athens by daylight,
 From these that my poor company detest:
 And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye,
 Steal me awhile from mine own company.

[Lies down and sleeps]

Puck. Yet but three? Come one more;
 Two of both kinds makes up four.
 Here she comes, curst and sad:
 Cupid is a knavish lad,
 Thus to make poor females mad. 440

Re-enter HERMIA

Her. Never so weary, never so in woe;
 Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with briers;
 I can no further crawl, no further go;
 My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
 Here will I rest me till the break of day.
 Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!
[Lies down and sleeps]

Puck. On the ground
 Sleep sound:
 I'll apply 450
 To your eye,
 Gentle lover, remedy.
[Squeezing the herb on Lysander's eyelids]
 When thou wak'st,
 Thou tak'st
 True delight
 In the sight
 Of thy former lady's eye:
 And the country prove it known,
 That every man should take his own,
 In your waking shall be shown: 460
 Jack shall have Jill;
 Nought shall go ill;

The man shall have his mare again, and all shall be well.
[Exit]

ACT IV

SCENE I. The wood. LYSANDER, DEMETRIUS, HELENA, and HERMIA, lying asleep

Enter TITANIA and BOTTOM; PEASE-BLOSSOM, COBWEB, MOTH, MUSTARD-SEED, and other Fairies attending;
OBERON behind unseen

Tita. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,
While I thy amiable cheeks do cov, ~~alt~~
And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head,
And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.

Bot. Where's Pease-blossom?

Peas. Ready.

Bot. Scratch my head, Pease-blossom. Where's Mounsieur Cobweb?

10 Cob. Ready.

Bot. Mounsieur Cobweb, good mounsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good mounsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, mounsieur; and, good mounsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not; I would be loth to have you over-flown with a honey-bag, signior. Where's Mounsieur Mustard-seed?

20 Mus. Ready.

Bot. Give me your neat, Mounsieur Mustard-seed.
Pray you, leave your courtesy, good mounsieur.

Mus. What's your will?

Bot. Nothing, good mounsieur, but to help Cavalery Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, mounsieur; for methinks I am marvellous hairy about the face; and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tita. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?

Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music: let's have the tongs and the bones. [Rough music

Tita. Or say, sweet love, what thou desir'st to eat.

Bot. Truly, a peck of provender: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay hath no fellow.

Tita. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts. 40

Bot. I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me: I have an exposition of sleep come upon me.

Tita. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Fairies, be gone, and be all ways away. [Exeunt Fairies
So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle
Gently entwist; the female ivy so
Enrings the barked fingers of the elm.
O, how I love thee! how I dote on thee! [They sleep 50

Enter PUCK

Obe. [Advancing] Welcome, good Robin. See'st thou this sweet sight?

Her dotage now I do begin to pity:
For, meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool,
I did upbraid her, and fall out with her;
For she his hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers;
And that same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flowerets' eyes,
Like tears, that did their own disgrace bewail.
When I had at my pleasure taunted her,
And she in mild terms begg'd my patience,
I then did ask of her her changeling child;
Which straight she gave me, and her fairy sent
To bear him to my bower in fairy land.
And now I have the boy, I will undo
This hateful imperfection of her eyes:
And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp

70 From off the head of this Athenian swain;
 That, he awaking when the other do,
 May all to Athens back again repair,
 And think no more of this night's accidents,
 But as the fierce vexation of a dream.
 But first I will release the fairy queen.

Be as thou wast wont to be;

[Touching her eyes with an herb

See as thou wast wont to see:

Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower !

Hath such force and blessed power

80 Now, my Titania; wake you, my sweet queen.

Tita. My Oberon! what visions have I seen!

Methought I was enamour'd of an ass.

Obe. There lies your love.

Tita.

How came these things to pass?

O, how mine eyes do loathe his visage now!

Obe. Silence awhile. Robin, take off this head.

Titania, music call; and strike more dead

Than common sleep of all these five the sense.

Tita. Music, ho! music, such as charmeth sleep!

[Music, still

Puck. Now, when thou wak'st, with thine own fool's eyes peep.

Obe. Sound, music! Come, my queen, take hands with me,

90 And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.

Now thou and I are new in amity,

And will to-morrow midnight solemnly

Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly,

And bless it to all fair prosperity:

There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be

Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark:

I do hear the morning lark.

100 Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sad,
 Trip we after the night's shade:

[We the globe can compass soon,
 Swifter than the wandering moon.
Tita. Come, my lord; and in our flight,
 Tell me how it came this night,
 That I sleeping here was found
 With these mortals on the ground. [Exeunt [Horns winded within

Enter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, EGEUS, and Train

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester;
 For now our observation is perform'd;
 And since we have the vaward of the day,
 My love shall hear the music of my hounds:
 Uncouple in the western valley; let them go:
 Dispatch, I say, and find the forester. [Exit an Attend.
 We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top,
 And mark the musical confusion
 Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Hip. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
 When in a wood of Crete they bay'd the bear
 With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
 Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves,
 The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry: I never heard
 So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

20

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
 So flew'd, so sanded; and their heads are hung
 With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
 Crook-knee'd, and dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bulls;
 Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
 Each under each. A cry more tuneable
 Was never holla'd to, nor cheer'd with horn,
 In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly:
 Judge when you hear. But, soft! what nymphs are these?

Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
 And this, Lysander; this Demetrius is;
 This Helena, old Nedar's Helena:

I wonder of their being here together.

The. No doubt they rose up early to observe
The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.

140 But speak, Egeus; is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?

Ege. It is, my lord.

The. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.

[*Horns and shout within. Lysander, Demetrius,
Helena, and Hermia awake and start up*]

Good morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past:
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?

Lys. Pardon, my lord.

The. I pray you all, stand up.

I know you two are rival enemies:
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,

150 To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?

Lys. My lord, I shall reply amazedly,
Half sleep, half waking: but as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here;
But, as I think,—for truly would I speak,
And now I do bethink me, so it is,—
I came with Hermia hither: our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might,
Without the peril of the Athenian law,—

Ege. Enough, enough, my lord; you have enough:
160 I beg the law, the law, upon his head.
They would have stolen away; they would, Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated you and me,
You of your wife, and me of my consent,
Of my consent that she should be your wife.

Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,
Of this their purpose hither to this wood;
And I in fury hither follow'd them,
Fair Helena in fancy following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,—

But by some power it is,—my love to Hermia,
 Melted as the snow, seems to me now 170
 As the remembrance of an idle gaud, . . .
 Which in my childhood I did dote upon;
 And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,
 The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
 Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
 Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia:
 But, like in sickness, did I loathe this food;
 But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
 Now do I wish it, love it, long for it, 180
 And will for evermore be true to it.

The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met:
 Of this discourse we more will hear anon.
 Egeus, I will overbear your will;
 For in the temple, by and by, with us
 These couples shall eternally be knit:
 And, for the morning now is something worn,
 Our purpos'd hunting shall be set aside.
 Away with us to Athens! three and three
 We'll hold a feast in great solemnity. 190
 Come, Hippolyta. [Exeunt The., Hip., Ege., and Train]

Dem. These things seem small and undistinguishable,
 Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.

Her. Methinks I see these things with parted eye,
 When every thing seems double.

Hel. So methinks
 And I have found Demetrius like a jewel,
 Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem. Are you sure
 That we are awake? It seems to me
 That yet we sleep, we dream. Do not you think
 The duke was here, and bid us follow him? 200

Her. Yea; and my father.

Hel. And Hippolyta.

Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why, then, we are awake: let's follow him;

And, by the way, let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt

Bot. [Awaking] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer: my next is, "Most fair Pyramus." Heigh-ho! Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's my life, stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a 210 dream,—past the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was, and methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall 225 sing it at her death. [Exit

SCENE II. Athens. QUINCE'S house

Enter QUINCE, FLUTE, SNOOT, and STARVELING

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet?

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is transported.

Flu. If he come not, then the play is marred: it goes not forward, doth it?

Quin. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens able to discharge Pyramus but he.

Flu. No, he hath simply the best wit of any handicraft 10 man in Athens.

Quin. Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice.

Flu. You must say paragon: a paramour is, God bless us, a thing of naught.

Enter SNUG

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married: if our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Flu. O sweet Bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a-day during his life; he could not have scaped 20 sixpence a-day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a-day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a-day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter BOTTOM

Bot. Where are these lads? where are these hearts?

Quin. Bottom! O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders: but ask me not what; for if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will 30 tell you every thing, right as it fell out.

Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you is, that the duke hath dined. Get your apparel together, good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case, let Thisby have clean linen; and let not him that 40 plays the lion pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath; and I do not doubt but to hear them say it is a sweet comedy. No more words: away! go, away!

[Exeunt]

ACT V

SCENE I. Athens. The palace of THESEUSEnter THESEUS, HIPPOLYTA, PHILOSTRATE, Lords, and AttendantsHip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

The. More strange than true: I never may believe These antique fables nor these fairy toys.
 Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
 Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
 More than cool reason ever comprehends.
 The lunatic, the lover, and the poet
 Are of imagination all compact:
 One sees more devils than vast hell can hold,
 That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic
 Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt:
 The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
 Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven,
 And, as imagination bodies forth
 The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
 Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
 A local habitation and a name.
 Such tricks hath strong imagination,
 That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
 20 It comprehends some bringer of that joy;
 Or in the night, imagining some fear,
 How easy is a bush suppos'd a bear!

Hip. But all the story of the night told over,
 And all their minds transfigur'd so together,
 More witnesseth than fancy's images,
 And grows to something of great constancy;
 But, howsoever, strange and admirable.

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter LYSANDER, DEMETRIUS, HERMIA, and HELENA

Joy, gentle friends! joy and fresh days of love
Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us 30
Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed!

The. Come now; what masques, what dances shall we have,

To wear away this long age of three hours
Between our after-supper and bed-time?

Where is our usual manager of mirth?

What revels are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Phil. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?
What masque? what music? How shall we beguile 40
The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Phil. There is a brief how many sports are ripe:
Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Giving a paper]

The. [Reads] "The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung
By an Athenian eunuch to the harp."

We'll none of that: that have I told my love,

In glory of my kinsman Hercules.

[Reads] "The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals, Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage."

That is an old device; and it was play'd

When I from Thebes came last a conqueror.

[Reads] "The thrice-three Muses mourning for the
Of Learning, late deceas'd in beggary."

That is some satire, keen and critical,

Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

[Reads] "A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus
And his love Thisbe; very tragical mirth."

Merry and tragical! tedious and brief!

That is, hot ice and wondrous strange snow.

How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Phil. A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious; for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted:
And tragical, my noble lord, it is;
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which, when I saw rehears'd, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
70 The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they that do play it?

Phil. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here,
Which never labour'd in their minds till now;
And now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same play against your nuptial.

The. And we will hear it.

Phil. No, my noble lord;
It is not for you: I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
80 Extremely stretch'd and conn'd with cruel pain,
To do you service.

The. I will hear that play;
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it
Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies.

[Exit Philostrate]

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says they can do nothing in this kind.

The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.
90 Our sport shall be to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect
Takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes;

Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence yet I pick'd a welcome; 100
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
In least speak most, to my capacity.

Re-enter PHILOSTRATE

Phil. So please your Grace, the Prologue is address'd.

The. Let him approach. [Flourish of trumpets]

Enter QUINCE for the Prologue

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good will.

That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To show our simple skill, 110

That is the true beginning of our end.

Consider, then, we come but in despite.

We do not come as minding to content you,

Our true intent is. 'All for your delight,

We are not here, That you should here repent you,

The actors are at hand, and by their show

You shall know all that you are like to know.

The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.

Lys. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt; he knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: it is not 120 enough to speak, but to speak true.

Hip. Indeed he hath played on his prologue like a child
on a recorder; a sound, but not in government.

The. His speech was like a tangled chain; nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is next?

Phil. A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious; for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted:
And tragical, my noble lord, it is;
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which, when I saw rehears'd, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
70 The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they that do play it?

Phil. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here,
Which never labour'd in their minds till now;
And now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same play against your nuptial.

The. And we will hear it.

Phil. No, my noble lord;
It is not for you: I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
80 Extremely stretch'd and conn'd with cruel pain
To do you service.

The. I will hear that play;
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it
Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies.

[Exit Philostrate]

Hip. I have not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says they can do nothing in this kind.

The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.
Our sport shall be to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect
Takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes;

Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence yet I pick'd a welcome; 100
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
In least speak most, to my capacity.

Re-enter PHILOSTRATE

Phil. So please your Grace, the Prologue is address'd.

The. Let him approach. [Flourish of trumpets]

Enter QUINCE for the Prologue

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good will.

That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To show our simple skill, 110

That is the true beginning of our end.

Consider, then, we come but in despite.

We do not come as minding to content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight,

We are not here, That you should here repent you,
The actors are at hand, and by their show
You shall know all that you are like to know.

The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.

Lys. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt; he knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: it is not 120 enough to speak, but to speak true.

Hip. Indeed he hath played on his prologue like a child
on a recorder; a sound, but not in government.

The. His speech was like a tangled chain; nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is next?

Enter PYRAMUS and THISBE, WALL, MOONSHINE, and LION

- Pro.* Gentles, perchance you wonder at this show;
But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
- 130 This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
This beauteous lady, Thisby is certain.
This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present
Wall, that vile Wall which did these lovers sunder;
And through Wall's chink, poor souls, they are content
To whisper: at the which let no man wonder.
This man, with lanthorn, dog, and bush of thorn,
Presenteth Moonshine; for, if you will know,
By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn
To meet at Ninus' tomb, there, there to woo.
- 140 This grisly beast, which Lion hight by name,
The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,
Did scare away, or rather did affright;
And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall,
Which Lion vile with bloody mouth did stain.
Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,
And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain:
Whereat, with blade, with bloody blameful blade,
He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast;
And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade,
- 150 His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
Let Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twain,
At large discourse, while here they do remain.
- [Exeunt Prologue, Pyramus, Thisbe, Lion, and Moonshine
The. I wonder if the lion be to speak.
Dem. No wonder, my lord: one lion may, when many asses do.
- Wall.* In this same interlude it doth befall
That I, one Snout by name, present a wall;
And such a wall, as I would have you think,
That had in it a crannied hole or chink,
- 160 Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby,
Did whisper often very secretly.
This loam, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth show

That I am that same wall; the truth is so:
And this the cranny is, right and 'sinister,
Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.

The. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!

170

Enter PYRAMUS

Pyr. O grim-look'd night! O night with hue so black!

O night, which ever art when day is not!

O night, O night! alack, alack, alack,

I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot!

And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall,

That stand'st between her father's ground and mine!

Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall,

Show me thy chink, to blink through with mine eyne!

[Wall holds up his fingers

Thanks, courteous wall: Jove shield thee well for this!

But what see I? No Thisby do I see.

180

O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss!

Curs'd be thy stones for thus deceiving me!

The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. "Deceiving me" is Thisby's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall pat as I told you. Yonder she comes.

Enter THISBE

This. O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans,

190

For parting my fair Pyramus and me!

My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones,

Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.

Pyr. I see a voice: now will I to the chink,

To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.

Thisby!

This. My love! thou art my love, I think.

Pyr. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace:
And, like Limander, am I trusty still.

This. And I like Helen, till the Fates me kill.

200 Pyr. Not Shafalus to Procrus was so true.

This. As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you.

Pyr. O, kiss me through the hole of this vile wall!

This. I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.

Pyr. Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?

This. 'Tide life, 'tide death, I come without delay.

[Exeunt Pyramus and Thisbe]

Wall. Thus have I, Wall, my part discharged so;
And being done, thus Wall away doth go. [Exit]

The. Now is the mural down between the two neighbours.

210 Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so wilful to hear without warning.

Hip. This is the silliest stuff that e'er I heard.

The. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Hip. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

220 The. If we imagine no worse of them than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter LION and MOONSHINE

Lion. You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear

The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on floor,

May now perchance both quake and tremble here,

When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.

Then know that I, one Snug the joiner, am

A lion-fell, nor else no lion's dam;

For, if I should as lion come in strife

230 Into this place, 'twere pity on my life.

The. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that e'er I saw.

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour.

The. True; and a goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion; and the fox carries the goose.

The. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon. 240

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moon present;—

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.

The. He is no crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference.

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moon present; Myself the man i' the moon do seem to be.

The. This is the greatest error of all the rest: the man should be put into the lanthorn. How is it else the man i' the moon? 250

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle; for, you see, it is already in snuff.

Hip. I am awearry of this moon: would he would change!

The. It appears, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, Moon. 260

Moon. All that I have to say is, to tell you that the lanthorn is the moon: I, the man in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lanthorn; for all these are in the moon. But, silence! here comes Thisbe.

Enter THISBE

This. This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?

Lion. [Roaring] O— [Thisbe runs off]

Dem. Well roared, Lion. 270

The. Well run, Thisbe.

Hip. Well shone, Moon. Truly, the moon shines with a good grace. [The Lion tears Thisbe's mantle, and exit

The. Well moused, Lion.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Enter PYRAMUS

Pyr. Sweet Moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams:

I thank thee, Moon, for shining now so bright;

For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering gleams,

280 I trust to taste of truest Thisby sight.

But stay,—O spite!—

But mark, poor knight,

What dreadful dole is here!

Eyes, do you see?

How can it be?

O dainty duck! O dear!

Thy mantle good,

What, stain'd with blood?

Approach, ye Furies fell!

290 O Fates, come, come,

Cut thread and thrum;

Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!

The. This passion, and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyr. O, wherefore, Nature, didst thou lions frame?

Since lion vile hath here deflower'd my dear:

Which is—no, no—which was the fairest dame

That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheer.

300 Come, tears, confound;

Out, sword, and wound

The pap of Pyramus;

Ay, that left pap,

Where heart doth hop: [Stabs himself]

Thus die I, thus, thus, thus.

Now am I dead,

Now am I fled;

My soul is in the sky:

Tongue, lose thy light;

310 Moon, take thy flight: [Exit Moonshine]

Now die, die, die, die.

[Dies]

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.

Lys. Less than an ace, man; for he is dead; he is nothing.

The. With the help of a surgeon he might yet recover, and prove an ass.

Hip. How chance Moonshine is gone before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover?

The. She will find him by starlight. Here she comes; 320 and her passion ends the play.

Re-enter THISBE

Hip. Methinks she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better; he for a man, God warrant us,—she for a woman, God bless us.

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she moans, videlicet:— 330

This. Asleep, my love?

What, dead, my dove?

O Pyramus, arise!

Speak, speak. Quite dumb?

Dead, dead? A tomb

* Must cover thy sweet eyes.

These lily lips,

This cherry nose,

These yellow cowslip cheeks,

Are gone, are gone: 340

Lovers, make moan:

His eyes were green as leeks.

O Sisters Three,

Come, come to me,

With hands as pale as milk;

Lay them in gore,

Since you have shore

With shears his thread of silk.

Tongue, not a word:

Come, trusty sword; 350

Come, blade, my breast imbrue: [Stabs herself
And, farewell, friends;

Thus Thisby ends:

Adieu, adieu, adieu. [Dies

The. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and Wall too.

Bot. [Starting up] No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the 360 epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company?

The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it had played Pyramus and hanged himself in Thisbe's garter, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But, come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone.

[A dance by two of the Clowns

370 The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve:

Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time.

I fear we shall outsleep the coming morn,

As much as we this night have overwatch'd.

This palpable-gross play hath well beguil'd

The heavy gait of night. Sweet friends, to bed.

A fortnight hold we this solemnity

In nightly revels and new jollity. [Exeunt

Enter PUCK

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars

And the wolf behowls the m<sup>oo</sup>ll,

380 Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,

All with weary task fordone.

Now the wasted brands do glow,

Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,

Puts the wretch that lies in woe

In remembrance of a shroud.

Now it is the time of night
 That the graves, all gaping wide,
 Every one lets forth his sprite,
 In the church-way paths to glide:
 And we fairies, that do run
 By the triple Hecate's team,
 From the presence of the sun,
 Following darkness like a dream,
 Now are frolic: not a mouse
 Shall disturb this hallow'd house:
 I am sent with broom, before,
 To sweep the dust behind the door.

390

Enter OBERON and TITANIA, with their Train

Obe. Through the house give glimmering light,
 By the dead and drowsy fire;
 Every elf and fairy sprite
 Hop as light as bird from brier;
 And this ditty, after me,
 Sing, and dance it trippingly.

400

Tita. First, rehearse your song by rote,
 To each word a warbling note:
 Hand in hand, with fairy grace,
 Will we sing, and bless this place.

[Song and dance]

Obe. Now, until the break of day,
 Through this house each fairy stray.
 To the best bride-bed will we,
 Which by us shall blessed be;
 And the issue there create
 Ever shall be fortunate.
 So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
 And the blots of Nature's hand
 Shall not in their issue stand;
 Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
 Nor mark prodigious, such as are 410

420        Despised in nativity,
           Shall upon their children be. .
           With this field-dew consecrate, .
           Every fairy take his gait;
           And each several chamber bless,
           Through this palace, with sweet peace:
           And the owner of it blest
           Ever shall in safety rest.
           Trip away; make no stay;
           Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and Trāin

430    Puck. If we shadows have offended,
           Think but this, and all is mended,
           That you have but slumber'd here,
           While these visions did appear.
           And this weak and idle theme,
           No more yielding but a dream,
           Gentles, do not reprehend:
           If you pardon, we will mend:
           And, as I am an honest Puck,
           If we have unearned luck
 440        Now to scape the serpent's tongue,
           We will make amends ere long;
           Else the Puck a liar call:
           So, good night unto you all.
           Give me your hands, if we be friends,
           And Robin shall restore amends.

[Exit

NOTES

ABBREVIATIONS:

E. = the English language; G. = Glossary.

Several other abbreviations used sometimes in the Notes are explained at the beginning of the Glossary, in which they occur more frequently. They should be observed; see p. 122.

ACT I

SCENE I

At the outset a dramatist should let us know what is supposed to have gone before and give us some idea of what the play is to be about. Observe how easily Shakespeare does this, and how he unites the different threads of the plot. (1) Theseus has won Hippolyta: we expect their wedding later on. It will, we learn, be celebrated with "merriments." This prepares us (2) for the scenes in which Bottom and his friends appear: their "interlude" will be connected with the wedding. (3) The love-complications, in which Theseus is appealed to, are set forth clearly: we see that they will form a considerable element in the play, and that their solution also will be connected, in some way, with the marriage of Theseus. (4) The lovers and the interlude-players select the same time of meeting and the same scene—as it happens, a very haunt of the fairies who, of course, play tricks on the poor "human mortals." Thus the main threads of interest are combined into that general tangle called the plot.

5. dowager, a widow with an income charged on an estate; see G.

6. withering out, delaying his full enjoyment of—because as long as the 'dowager' lives the heir has to pay the income due to her.

7, 8. This implies that four full days and nights were to elapse before the wedding; but the action of the play really extends over only three days and two nights (see Introduction, p. xv).

11. solemnities; used especially of a wedding ceremony.

Philostrate; the name is from Chaucer (The Knight's Tale, 570).

12. merriments, i.e. such as the play of Bottom and his friends.

13. pert, lively; in a good sense; see G.

15. Cf. Collins, The Passions, "Pale Melancholy sat retired": an appropriate epithet when melancholy is personified.

companion; here, as often in Shakespeare, contemptuous; cf. 2 Henry IV, II. 4. 132, "I scorn you, scurvy companion ('fellow')." Literally 'one who takes meals with another'—Lat. cum + panis, bread.

16, 17. According to the story in Plutarch, Theseus overthrew the Amazons in battle, and married either Hippolyta or Antiopa.

19. triumph, festivities, pageants; see G.

20. duke, ruler (Lat. dux); it is Chaucer's title for Theseus; cf. The Knight's Tale, 2, "Ther was a duk that highte [was called] Theseus." Cf. Genesis xxxvi. 15, "dukes of the sons of Esau," i.e. chiefs.

21. Egeus; the name is from Plutarch; scan as three syllables.

27. Scan 'witch'd; prefixes are often dropped. bosom, heart.

28. Note thou to Lysander, you to Theseus (127): in Shakespeare thou often expresses contempt or anger,—you, respect. Also, the repetition thou, thou is contemptuous.

32. i.e. and stealthily hast stamped thyself on her imagination. The metaphor is that of making a stamp or mark on some soft substance—as we say, 'making an impression on' (cf. Venus and Adonis, 566), and so gaining influence over. Hermia's fancy is occupied with the image of Lysander, to the exclusion of all other people.

33. gaud=any trifle, toy; here perhaps 'trinkets.' From Lat. gaudium, joy—in Late Lat. an ornament. Cf. IV. 1. 172.

Shakespeare elsewhere uses conceit=a fanciful thought or device; so here conceits=things (i.e. gifts) fancifully thought out or devised.

34. knacks; as we say, 'knick-knacks'=trifles; see G.

35. prevailment, influence. unhardened, soft, impressionable.

39. i.e. if it be so that. Grace; the appellation of a duke.

41. privilege of Athens, right enjoyed by Athenian citizens.

42. i.e. that, as she is mine, I may etc.

44. our law. By one of the laws of Solon, the great Athenian law-giver, parents had power of life and death over their children. Really Solon, born about 638 B.C., belonged to a much later date than the period in which the events of this play are supposed to occur.

45. immediately, expressly. in that case, to meet such a case. Shakespeare is using the legal terms of an indictment, the technical formula to which he alludes being, "In such case made and provided." Many legal phrases are used (quite accurately) by Shakespeare; and this has been considered by some to confirm the vague tradition that as a youth he was for a time in an attorney's office.

46. be advised, be careful, take heed; cf. F. s'aviser, to consider.

51. disfigure = unfigure, make it cease to be a figure or form.

54. in this kind, in a matter of this kind (marriage); or in this respect, viz. that he wants your father's approval ("voice"). In 55 the construction changes; strictly wanting has nothing to agree with.

60. concern, suit, befit.

65. die the death, a proverbial phrase; "the death," i.e. the death that is the appointed penalty of the particular offence. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 14. 26, "She hath betray'd me and shall die the death," i.e. the death appointed for traitors.

67. question, examine, interrogate, your affections.

68. Know of, inquire of. blood, passions (as in 74).

69, 70. Whether... You can; dependent on the verbs in 68. Scan whether as a monosyllable = whe'er; cf. III. 2. 81.

70-78. The gist of these lines and of 89, 90 is that Hermia may have to dedicate herself to the service of Diana, the goddess of maidenhood, whose rites were celebrated by virgin-priestesses. Shakespeare expresses the idea in terms, e.g. "nun," "cloister," which being associated with the monastic life of mediæval Christianity are, strictly speaking, inappropriate in the mouth of Theseus, a pagan Greek. The passage, in fact, is a kind of anachronism.

70. livery, dress (see G.); here = the state of those who wear it.

71. cloister; "an Abbey, Priory, religious House" (as here)—Corgrave (1611). Lat. claustrum or clostrum. mewed, shut up; see G.

72. sister; in its religious sense 'nun'; cf. 70.

73. moon, a type of chastity, Diana was the moon-goddess.

74, 75. Doubtless, meant as a compliment to Queen Elizabeth, the Maiden Queen, who was probably present at the first performance.

75. maiden pilgrimage, passage through life as maidens.

76-78. A figurative way of saying that for most people the married state is to be preferred to the single. It is the thought worked out by Shakespeare in many of his Sonnets (wherein he urges his friend "W. H." to marry), the metaphor of the rose whose perfume is "distilled," or extracted, occurring in 54; see also 1 and 5. And editors quote a passage similar to the present from the Latin Colloquies of Erasmus, which may be rendered: "I consider the rose happier which withers in a man's hand, delighting meanwhile both his eyes and his nostrils, than that which withers on the bush."

76. earthlier happy = more earthly-happy, i.e. happier as regards this world. earthlier, the comparative of the adj. used adverbially; cf. wiselier, Tempest, II. 1. 21. Capell's conjecture earthly happier would be a simpler reading, but no change is needed.

80. virgin patent, patent (= privilege, right) of virginity. Cf. "thy fair virtue" = the virtue or force of thy fairness, III. 1. 143; "civil bounds" = bounds of civility, Twelfth Night, I. 4. 21. Note that in these cases, which are frequent in Shakespeare, (1) the adj. + the noun = a compound noun (e.g. virginity-patent); (2) the adj. defines the sphere or extent of the noun. Thus here "virgin" defines the character of the "patent": it is a patent consisting in virginity. English does not adapt itself like German to compounds.

81. i.e. unto the lordship (= sovereignty, rule) of that man to whose yoke etc. his, emphatic; it contains the antecedent of whose.

82. give = give to; in modern E. the preposition is omitted only before a personal noun or pronoun, e.g. 'give it me.'

88. as he would, as he (your father) desires.

89. Diana, the Latin goddess identified with the Greek goddess Artemis; strictly, the Greek Theseus should not be made to use the Latin name. protest, vow.

90. austerity, strictness of life, virginity.

92. crazed, faulty, with a flaw in it; see G.

98. estate unto, make over unto, bestow on him.

99. my lord, Theseus; cf. 24.

99, 100. i.e. as well-born and as wealthy as he. Cf. Two Gentlemen of Verona, V. 2. 23, "you are well derived" = of good birth.

101, 102. i.e. at least equal to his fortunes, if not actually better.

105. prosecute, endeavour to obtain.

106. to his head, in his presence; we should say 'to his face.'

107, 108. Cf. what Demetrius himself admits, IV. 1. 176, 177.

109. devoutly, with devotion, most earnestly.

110. spotted, wicked; cf. Titus Andronicus, II. 3. 74, "Spotted, detested, and abominable." So Lat. maculosus = defiled. The metaphor is clearer in spotless = without stain, i.e. innocent.

113. self-affairs, my own affairs; but Theseus is not so absorbed in them as to put aside now his duties as ruler.

116. schooling, instructions, i.e. in connection with the matters alluded to in 124-126. Some take schooling = reprimand.

120. extenuate, mitigate, relax; make tenuis (Latin), slender. The decision of Theseus is that of the Duke in The Merchant of Venice: the law must take its course: to override the law, however good the motive for doing so, were a fatal precedent.

122. what cheer? how is it with you? cheer; see G.

123. go along, come along with me.

126. nearly that, i.e. that nearly concerns.

128. The plot requires this private conference between Hermia and Lysander at which the scheme to leave Athens may be arranged; so Shakespeare makes Theseus command all the other characters then on the stage to go with him. The device seems artificial, for Egeus would not leave Hermia alone with the lover whom he detests. But in the Elizabethan theatre, as there was no curtain to fall and practically no scenery to mark a change of scene, the tendency was to extend a scene instead of starting a fresh one: as if the playwright thought that certain characters might as well stay as go off and return.

129. chance; a verb. Cf. Milton, Comus, 508, "How chance she is not in your company?" The phrase combines two constructions: (1) 'how does it chance that?' and (2) 'by what chance?'

130. Belike, as it seems, I suppose; probably = by likelihood.

131. Beteem, give, vouchsafe; see G.

132. Ayme, alas; see G.

134. One of the most familiar quotations from Shakespeare.

135. blood, birth; the two persons are not of the same social rank.

136. cross, vexation, mischance (cf. 153). high...low; as regards position in life. Note how in each line (136, 138, 140) Hermia echoes and comments on Lysander's words. Dialogue in alternate lines (the στυχομυθία of Gk tragedy) is a feature of early English plays like Gorboduc modelled on the Latin writer Seneca, who imitated the Greek tragedians Cf. Richard II, 1. 3. 258-264 (note).

143. momentary, lasting a moment, brief; see G.

144. shadow...dream. Universally treated as symbols of that which quickly passes away. Cf. Job viii. 9, "our days upon earth are a shadow," and xx. 8, "he shall fly away as a dream."

145. collied, murky, literally 'black as with coal'; cf. collier.

146. spleen, sudden motion, fit; commonly of passion, laughter, etc.

147, 148. Cf. Romeo, II. 2. 119, 120, "Like the lightning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say 'It lightens.'"

149. confusion, destruction; scan it as two feet. In Shakespeare and in Milton (early poems) -ion is often pronounced as two syllables at the end of a line (especially with words ending in ction, such as 'affection,' 'distraction'). Cf. Milton, Nativity Ode, 163, "When at | the world's | last sess |i-ón" (i.e. four feet). This scansion of -ion was the regular practice in Middle English. Cf. III. 2. 230, 370, 371.

150. ever, always.

151. édict, decree, law of destiny. Scan édict = Lat. edictum; cf. Milton, Samson Agonistes, 301, "As to his own édicts found contradicting"; and contrast 1 Henry IV, IV. 3. 79, "Some certain édicts and some strait decrees" (the modern accentuation). Where modern E. throws the accent forward Elizabethan E. often kept it back on the syllable accented in the original Latin word and in the French; cf. áspect, in Shakespeare aspéct, Lat. aspéctus; cómmerce, in Shakespeare commérce, Lat. commercium; and revenue in l. 158. Since the 17th century this French accent (from the Latin) has gradually yielded to the influence of the Teutonic element in English.

152. Scan patience as a trisyllable ('páti-énce'). Generally i or e before a vowel is merged in it, not pronounced; cf. 'marriage,' 'amiable,' 'vengeance' etc. But sometimes—as here—metre requires the i or e to be scanned separately; cf. 'ám|i-á|ble,' IV. 1. 2.

154. due to, belonging to. sighs; cf. the picture in As You Like It, II. 7. 148, of the lover "sighing like furnace:"

155. fancy, love; then a very common meaning. Cf. II. 1. 164.

158. Scan revénue, and contrast révenue (as now) in l. 6.

160. respects, regards.

161-163. Cf. Lysander's words, IV. 1. 156-158.

164. forth, a preposition = forth from, out of.

165. without, outside; cf. IV. 1. 158.

167. i.e. to pay homage to May-day by observing its rites. Cf. Chaucer, The Knight's Tale, 642, "And for to doon his obseruance to May"; and The Two Noble Kinsmen, II. 4. 49-52:

"you must be ready,
To-morrow, by the sun, to do observance
To flow'ry May, in Dian's wood."

Perhaps "to do observance" was proverbial in this connection.

In our old writers, from Chaucer downwards, there are constant allusions to the ceremonies and customs connected with May-day—the 'going a-Maying' early to gather hawthorn (hence termed may); the bringing it home to decorate the villages; the crowning of the May-Queen, setting up of the May-pole and dances; and the singing of May-carols (cf.

Milton's "Song on May Morning"). The Puritans objected strongly to these May-day observances.

169, 170. According to classical legend, Cupid, the god of love, son of Venus, was armed (see II. i. 157) with a bow and two sorts of arrows, tipped with gold or lead—the former to cause, the latter to repel, love (Ovid, Metamorphoses i. 469-471). Cf. the Glosse to Spenser's Shepheards Calender, March, "He [Cupid] is sayd to have shafts, some leaden, some golden."

171. simplicity, innocence. doves, the birds sacred to Venus, whose car they drew; cf. "dove-drawn" said of her, Tempest, IV. 94.

173, 174. that fire, the funeral pyre on which Dido, queen of Carthage, burned herself when Æneas, the Trojan, with whom she was in love, sailed away to Italy. Vergil tells the story, Æn. IV. 504 et seq. Strictly, the allusion is an anachronism, because Greek mythology made Æneas live long after the time of Theseus. Cf. 70-73, note.

180. whither away? where are you going to?

181. that fair, i.e. that word 'fair.'

182. fair=fairness: an adj.=noun, as often in Shak. Cf. Sonnet 16, "Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair."

183. The lode- (or load-) star is the polar star; literally 'the star that leads' (i.e. sailors); from A.S. lad, a way, lédan, to lead.

184. tuneable, tuneful; see IV. i. 129. In Elizabethan E. the termination -able, now commonly passive, was often active=-ful. We still have 'changeable'=full of change, 'peaceable,' and some others.

186. catching, contagious. 'You may (says Helena) "catch" a disease (by infection) from a person: would that you might also "catch" (i.e. get, obtain) his face, looks, voice etc.'—a kind of quibble or pun on "catch." favour, features; see G.

187. Yours would I; Hanmer's correction of the reading in the Quartos and 1st Folio, Your words I. Yours, i.e. favour.

190, 191. i.e. I would give the whole world—except Demetrius—to be like you; literally, 'to be transformed ("translated," see III. i. 122) into you,'=into your likeness. bate=abate, to deduct, except.

191. I'll; after were in 190 strict sequence of tenses requires I'd; but such irregularities, often very vivid (as here), and due to some sudden change of thought, are not uncommon in Shakespeare.

207. i.e. hath made Athens, formerly like "a Paradise" (205), now like a Hell to me (because while she stays in Athens she is not allowed to see Lysander). Cf. II. i. 243.

209. Phœbe, a classical name of the moon, as Phœbus of the sun.

211. pearl, dew; a favourite comparison; cf. II. I. 14, 15.

212. still, always, or constantly.

215. faint, either of scent or of colour (since they are "in the wood," i.e. out of the sun); perhaps the latter—cf. "pale primroses," Winter's Tale, IV. 4. 122, Cymbeline, IV. 2. 221.

216. sweet; the Quartos and Folios have sweld; the correction (Theobald's) is required by the rhyme. But it loses the antithesis between emptying and swelled.

219. stranger companies; the Quartos and Folios have strange companions. The rhyme requires companies.

222. Keep word, keep your promise.

224. I will, i.e. keep word.

226. some...other some = certain people...others. The original meaning of some was 'a certain,' 'one,' and in the plural 'people'; and other some (preceded by some) was then a not uncommon idiom = other people; cf. Acts xvii. 18.

231. So I, so do I err.

admiring of; I take admiring as a present participle and of as the redundant preposition found in Elizabethan E. with many verbs; cf. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. xxiii. 13, "Neither doth learning admire or esteem of this architecture." So in the same work (II. xxv. 7) "define of" and "discern of" (II. xxi. 1). Another view is that admiring is not a participle but a verbal noun before which the prep. in or on or a must be supplied—as though Shakespeare had written "in admiration of." So Abbott (178) explains Lear, II. I. 40, 41, "Here stood he... mumbling of wicked charms" = a-mumbling of.

232. quantity, proportion. The real value of things bears no proportion to the exaggerated value which love attributes to them.

233. transpose, transform. form, goodly appearance.

234. Cf. Merchant of Venice, III. 2. 63, "where is fancy [love] bred?"

235. Cf. the Glosse to Spenser's Shepheards Calender, March, "so is he [Cupid] described of the Poetes to be a boye [cf. 241]... blindfolded, because he maketh no difference of personages: wyth divers coloured winges." This notion of Cupid's blindness is mediæval, not classical.

236. taste of, particle of; love is quite devoid of judgment.

237. figure, symbolise.

242. eyne, eyes; see G.

243. hail'd down, poured down as thick as hail.

249. a dear expense, a privilege bought at a high price; since it is not her interest that Demetrius should meet Hermia.

251. She means to go with him to the wood (though one might suppose that he would object to her company); and these last lines, 248-251, are intended to explain why she does so strange a thing as to bring her rival, Hermia, and Demetrius together.

SCENE II

The whole scene is imitated closely in The Two Noble Kinsmen, III. 5 (a part written, no doubt, by Fletcher), where the morris-dancers have a final rehearsal of the piece they are to enact before Theseus and Hippolyta.

In Shakespeare's plays and in Elizabethan plays generally there is (I believe) a considerable element of what has been called 'topical allusion'—allusion, that is, to topics and events of the time, literary customs, current jokes etc. Observe the 'topical' references in this scene, e.g. to (1) the affected titles of plays, poems etc., 11-15; (2) familiar types of stage-character, 31-32, 41-43; (3) stage-devices of representation, 51, 52; and perhaps (4) current jokes, 77, 111. Sometimes we feel that there must be an allusion in the text: only the key to it has been lost.

2. Doubtless Bottom, the weaver, is so called in allusion to bottom, 'a ball of thread'—a term used by weavers; see G. and p. lii.

You were best, a common Elizabethan idiom; cf. Julius Caesar, III. 3. 15, "answer truly...you were best." It may be the Old English impersonal use = to you it were best—you a dative; but probably the construction is personal—you a nominative. Cf. "I were best," Cymbeline, III. 6. 19; which in O.E. would have been "me were best" = to me it were best. People misunderstood that (1) me was a dative, (2) the sentence was impersonal, and substituted I which seemed more correct. The impersonal constructions so largely used in O.E. were becoming less familiar to the Elizabethans.

generally; he means separately. Cf. the mistake in 84. Bottom's love of long words leads him into such blunders.

3. the scrip = "the scroll," i.e. the list of actors. Lat. scriptum.

6. interlude, entertainment; see G.

10. grow to a point, come to an end (cf. 'come to the point').

11. Marry, an exclamation often used to affirm a thing = 'indeed,' 'why,' 'to be sure'; corrupted from the name 'Virgin Mary.' Cf. by'r lakin, III. 1. 14. Such expressions dated from pre-Reformation times.

11-13. The title is thought to be a parody of that prefixed to Cambyses, a play by Thomas Preston (see IV. 2. 19, 20, note), licensed 1570 and described on the title-page as "A lamentable

209. Phœbe, a classical name of the moon, as Phœbus of the sun.

211. pearl, dew; a favourite comparison; cf. II. 1. 14, 15.

212. still, always, or constantly.

215. faint, either of scent or of colour (since they are "in the wood," i.e. out of the sun); perhaps the latter—cf. "pale primroses," Winter's Tale, IV. 4. 122, Cymbeline, IV. 2. 221.

216. sweet; the Quartos and Folios have sweld; the correction (Theobald's) is required by the rhyme. But it loses the antithesis between emptying and swelled.

219. stranger companies; the Quartos and Folios have strange companions. The rhyme requires companies.

222. Keep word, keep your promise.

224. I will, i.e. keep word.

226. some...other some = certain people...others. The original meaning of some was 'a certain,' 'one,' and in the plural 'people'; and other some (preceded by some) was then a not uncommon idiom = other people; cf. Acts xvii. 18.

231. So I, so do I err.

admiring of; I take admiring as a present participle and of as the redundant preposition found in Elizabethan E. with many verbs; cf. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. xxiii. 13, "Neither doth learning admire or esteem of this architecture." So in the same work (II. xxv. 7) "define of" and "discern of" (II. xxi. 1). Another view is that admiring is not a participle but a verbal noun before which the prep. in or on or a must be supplied—as though Shakespeare had written "in admiration of" So Abbott (178) explains Lear, II. 1. 40, 41, "Here stood he...mumbling of wicked charms" = a-mumbling of.

232. quantity, proportion. The real value of things bears no proportion to the exaggerated value which love attributes to them.

233. transpose, transform. form, goodly appearance.

234. Cf. Merchant of Venice, III. 2. 63, "where is fancy [love] bred?"

235. Cf. the Glosse to Spenser's Shepheards Calender, March, "so is he [Cupid] described of the Poetes to be a boye [cf. 241]...blindfolded, because he maketh no difference of personages: wyth divers coloured winges." This notion of Cupid's blindness is mediæval, not classical.

236. taste of, particle of; love is quite devoid of judgment.

237. figure, symbolise.

242. eyne, eyes; see G.

243. hail'd down, poured down as thick as hail.

249. a dear expense, a privilege bought at a high price; since it is not her interest that Demetrius should meet Hermia.

251. She means to go with him to the wood (though one might suppose that he would object to her company); and these last lines, 248-251, are intended to explain why she does so strange a thing as to bring her rival, Hermia, and Demetrius together.

SCENE II

The whole scene is imitated closely in The Two Noble Kinsmen, III. 5 (a part written, no doubt, by Fletcher), where the morris-dancers have a final rehearsal of the piece they are to enact before Theseus and Hippolyta.

In Shakespeare's plays and in Elizabethan plays generally there is (I believe) a considerable element of what has been called 'topical allusion'—allusion, that is, to topics and events of the time, literary customs, current jokes etc. Observe the 'topical' references in this scene, e.g. to (1) the affected titles of plays, poems etc., 11-15; (2) familiar types of stage-character, 31-32, 41-43; (3) stage-devices of representation, 51, 52; and perhaps (4) current jokes, 77, 111. Sometimes we feel that there must be an allusion in the text: only the key to it has been lost.

2. Doubtless Bottom, the weaver, is so called in allusion to bottom, 'a ball of thread'—a term used by weavers; see G. and p. lii.

You were best, a common Elizabethan idiom; cf. Julius Caesar, III. 3. 13, "answer truly...you were best." It may be the Old English impersonal use = to you it were best—you a dative; but probably the construction is personal—you a nominative. Cf. "I were best," Cymbeline, III. 6. 19: which in O.E. would have been "me were best" = to me it were best. People misunderstood that (1) me was a dative, (2) the sentence was impersonal, and substituted I which seemed more correct. The impersonal constructions so largely used in O.E. were becoming less familiar to the Elizabethans.

generally; he means separately. Cf. the mistake in 84. Bottom's love of long words leads him into such blunders.

3. the scrip = "the scroll," i.e. the list of actors. Lat. scriptum.

6. interlude, entertainment; see G.

10. grow to a point, come to an end (cf. 'come to the point').

11. Marry, an exclamation often used to affirm a thing = 'indeed,' 'why,' 'to be sure'; corrupted from the name 'Virgin Mary.' Cf. by'r lakin, III. 1. 14. Such expressions dated from pre-Reformation times.

11-18. The title is thought to be a parody of that prefixed to Cambyeses, a play by Thomas Preston (see IV. 2. 19, 20, note), licensed 1570 and described on the title-page as "A lamentable tragedy mixed ful of pleasant mirth etc." Falstaff could speak in mock-tragic "King Cambyses' vein," 1 Henry IV, II. 4. 425.

14, 15. and a merry, a satiric glance at the fanciful sub-titles of poems once in vogue. Thus Skelton's Magnyfycence (1529) is called "A goodly interlude and a mery."

16. spread yourselves, stand apart; not all together.

24. a tyrant; such as King Herod in the 'Miracle-plays,' whom Hamlet (III. 2. 16) takes as a type of the ranting, swaggering stage-tyrant. It is characteristic of Bottom to assume that he has been chosen to play the chief part. All through he shows himself the leading spirit of "our company" (I. 1); see III. 1. 8, note.

25. gallant = gallantly, which the Folios read.

27. ask, require; a common sense in Elizabethan E.

29. condole. Some think that this is one of Bottom's mistakes; but perhaps condole = mourn (used absolutely) was then good E.

31, 32. For Shakespeare's audience such allusions were clear and full of point, especially for the older play-goers who could remember the last performances of the 'Miracle-plays.' They had seen Judas e.g. on the stage with his red beard (As You Like It, III. 4. 7-9) and the loud-voiced, blustering 'tyrant' Herod (Hamlet, III. 2. 13).

Again, the life of Hercules ('Ercles) and the story of his twelve labours had formed the subject of various dramatic pieces in which Hercules was a blustering character. Cf. Greene's Groats-worth of Wit (1592), where an actor says, "The Twelve Labours of Hercules haue I terribly thundered on the stage." This violent, melodramatic style which was so popular in the early period of the Elizabethan drama, being a survival from the old 'Miracle-plays,' was in a great measure driven from the stage by Shakespeare's own influence. He ridicules it in Hamlet, -III. 2. 1-40.

to tear a cat in; a proverbial phrase for stage-ranting, i.e. violent speech. In Histrion-Mastix (1610), some one says to an actor: "Sirrah, this is you that would rend and tear a cat upon the stage."

to make all split; another proverbial phrase, signifying violent action; originally used among sailors, the metaphor being that of a ship breaking up on rocks. Cf. Greene's Never Too Late (1590), "as the Mariners say, a man would have thought al would haue split againe." Hence the general idea of bluster. It offended Hamlet (III. 2. 11, 12) to hear a noisy actor "tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings" (=the people in the pit of a theatre).

33-40. Either a quotation from some piece like The Twelve Labours mentioned above; or a parody of the style of such pieces. On the alliteration (r...r, s...s etc.) see v. 147, note.

37. Phubbus, Phœbus, the sun.

39. make, make fortunate; proverbially contrasted with mar.

44. bellows-mender; Flute repaired the bellows of organs etc.: a quasi-musical profession, whence his name (cf. l. 2, note).

47. wandering, i.e. a knight-errant (Lat. errans = wandering); like Spenser's Redcrosse Knight in the Faerie Queene.

50. play a woman. On the Elizabethan stage female parts were played by young men or boy-actors; cf. Coriolanus, II. 2. 100, "When he might act the woman in the scene," and As You Like It. where Rosalind says in the Epilogue, "if I were a woman." A French company of players visited London in 1629, and that was the first appearance in England of women on the public stage; but the innovation was unpopular—indeed the foreigners were hissed off the boards. Probably, however, there were occasional cases during the reign of Charles I of women acting in public (at private entertainments it was quite usual); and after the Restoration the practice was legalised by a Royal Patent issued in 1662.

In Elizabethan plays female characters are often disguised as youths (cf. Rosalind, Portia, and Imogen in Cymbeline); and "the fact that female parts were played by youths had, of course, something to do with the frequency of these disguises."

51, 52. No doubt, when a boy-actor who had to play a woman's part was not so feminine-looking as to pass well for a woman, he wore a mask; and as the mask was then much used by ladies it would not have an odd effect on the stage. Of course, the actor would modulate his voice in a female tone. small, in a treble voice, high and clear ("little," 54).

53. An, if; see G.

55. Thisne, Thisne; so the Quartos and Folios; probably a mistake for Thisbe—but whose? Most likely, not the printer's (contrast the next line). And if Bottom's, why does he make it only here? Perhaps the reason is that the name is the first word that he has to utter in this his first attempt to speak in a "monstrous little voice." For an instant, may be, it plays him false; then by the next line he has recovered himself. The reading 'thisne, thisne,' = 'in this manner,' a sense which thissen bears in some dialects, has been suggested.

62-66. Note that three characters in the 'interlude' are here mentioned who do not appear when it is performed; also that afterwards Quince plays the Prologue and Snout the Wall.

Changes were made after Bottom's suggestions in III. 1. 18-23, 68-73.

67. fitted, suitably arranged; cf. v. 65.

71. nothing but roaring. Really the lion has eight lines to speak when the 'interlude' is performed in Act V. But that was one of the changes made after the rehearsal in Act III. sc. 1.

77. fright...the ladies. Perhaps this was or became a proverbial joke. Thus in Jonson's Masque of Augurs a character proposes to bring some performing bears on the stage and the Master of the Revels says that he would consent, "if he [I] were assured the aforesaid game would...not fright the ladies."

84. aggravate, make louder than usual; he means the opposite. roar you, i.e. for you: you representing the old dative. •

88. proper, fine, handsome. These compliments in Quince's speech induce Bottom to yield. Bottom might well shine in comparison with the others, whose appearances are shown by their names, e.g. Quince's jaundiced (yellow) complexion. Novelists often use descriptive names for their characters; cf. instances in Dickens and Thackeray. (But see p. lii.)

95. your; used thus colloquially, like Lat. iste, to indicate some person or thing known to everyone; cf. Hamlet, III. 2. 3, "you mouth it, as many of your players do," i.e. the players whom you and everybody know. So in III. 1. 33. beard; the actors in the 'interlude' wore false beards (see IV. 2. 36).

96. orange-tawny; dark yellow; see G.

97. purple-in-grain, red; cf. "mustachio-purple-hued" = having red mustaches, 1 Henry IV, II. 1. 83. purple = red (e.g. of blood) is common in Shakespeare; see II. 1. 167, and cf. the use of purpureus in Latin.

grain = dye, properly scarlet dye; see G. •

French-crown-colour; light yellow, like a French gold coin.

99. French crowns; Quince is punning. Here crown = the crown of the head, and "French crown" is a slang term for a bald head (a disease called "the French disease" producing baldness).

102. entreat...desire. He begins with the strongest, and ends with the weakest, verb: a type of anti-climax time-honoured as a joke.

con, learn by heart; cognate with can, A.S. cunnan, to know.

104. a mile; Lysander (I. 1. 165) said a league (about 3 miles).

• 107. devices, schemes; or perhaps = performance, as in v. 50.

107, 108. draw a bill, write out a list.

properties, still the technical word for stage-requisites and actors' equipments, such as Moonshine's "lanthorn...and bush." v. 136.

111. obscurely; meaning (?) obscurely, in the dark; cf. "by moonlight," l. 104. Costard in Love's Labour's Lost, IV. 1. 145, blunders over the same word. Perhaps there was some current joke about it.

114. hold, or cut bow-strings; apparently a proverbial way of pledging oneself to fulfil an engagement, under the severest penalty for breaking it. Some say that the phrase was used by archers when they made up a party for shooting at the butts. A man, in undertaking to be present, said that he would "hold" = keep his promise: if he broke his promise, they might "cut his bow-strings," as a punishment.

ACT II

SCENE I

3. Thorough; the metre requires this form; see G.

7. moon's; = two syllables; cf. room, 58. Several of these lines (e.g. 6-8) have inverted stresses, with an extra syllable at the end—thus: "I do | wánder | év'ry | whére." (A so-called 'trochaic' foot consists of a stressed syllable followed by an unstressed; a so-called 'iambic' foot is just the reverse—see II. 2. 77, note.)

sphere, orbit, i.e. the hollow region of space through which the moon makes its circuit. According to the then accepted Ptolemaic system of astronomy, this sphere itself moved (as well as the moon).

9. orbs, the circles of luxuriant, rich-coloured grass often found in meadows; they were popularly thought to be caused by the fairies dancing 'in a round' (see 140). In The Tempest, v. 37, Prospero addresses the fairies that "By moonshine do the green sour ringlets make" (see 86). The prosaic, scientific explanation of these 'fairy-rings' is that they are due to fungi which fringe their outer border and by absorbing inorganic materials serve as fertilisers. (In the ash of the common fungus St George's Agaric a phosphate composed of Potash and Phosphoric Acid forms about 86 per cent. of the whole; and this phosphate is a very strong fertiliser.)

10. pensioners, attendants, retainers; see G.

11. The uniforms of the Queen's Pensioners may be referred to.

12. fairy favours, presents given by the fairies; cf. IV. 1. 54.

A recent writer on Shakespeare's fairy-lore has some remarks aptly illustrated in this scene (Shakespeare's England, 1916, I. 536):

"Fairies are essentially the little people. With their whims and caprices and tempers, they are shadows of humanity in miniature, and act as tiny but potent guardians, blessing the homes, rewarding the minor virtues, and punishing the minor trespasses of 'human mortals.' Shakespeare's fays are not soul-endangering spiritual powers; there is ever something childlike and irresponsible in their winsome ways."

16. lob, clown; rather a contemptuous word; perhaps the fairy who serves Titania herself disdains the mere 'Hobgoblin' who plays clownish pranks on country-folk; see G.

17. elves, sprites; elf is Teutonic; A S. ælf, Germ. elf.

20. passing fell, very fierce. passing = exceedingly.

wrath, wrathful; not elsewhere in Shakespeare an adj.; but used so by Milton, Nativity Ode, 171, "wrath to see his kingdom fail."

22. Titania gives a different account of the boy (123-137).

23. changeling, a child stolen by the fairies; commonly used of the fairy-child (or elf) left by them in place of the human one—cf. Tennyson's Gareth, "the king is not the king, But only changeling out of Fairy-land." Scan 'changeling' as three syllables.

25. trace, wander through, i.e. with him (Oberon).

29, 30. spangled, looking like spangles (i.e. silver discs).

sheen, brightness; akin to Germ. schön, beautiful.

square, quarrel.

33. shrewd, mischievous; see G.

34. Robin Goodfellow. See Introduction, pp. xxix, xxx.

Some of the tricks mentioned in this and the next speech are among those which other writers attribute to Robin Goodfellow, in accordance with popular superstition.

35. villagery; a collective word = villages. Scan villag'ry.

36. Skim milk, i.e. steal the cream from it. labour in the quern, grind corn—a good action. She mentions Puck's good and bad habits together. quern, a hand-mill for grinding corn; see G.

Skim...labour; the singular after "he that" would be more regular, but the construction is influenced by the sense, which is—'do you not skim? do you not labour?' So with make, 37, 38, and mislead, 39.

36, 38. sometimes or sometime is used as the rhythm requires.

37. bootless, to no purpose, uselessly; an adverb qualifying churn.

• 38. barm, frothy 'head,' yeast (a sign of fermentation).

39. Mislead, with false fire (III, 1. 112).

40. Hob; corrupted from Robin goblin; see G.

46. filly, a mare colt; the 1st Folio has silly.

47, 48. There was a beverage called 'Gossip's cup,' of which the ingredients were ale, spice (nutmeg), sugar, toast, and roasted crab-apples; so named because much in vogue at christening feasts (see gossip in G.). Cf. L'Allegro, 100, "the spicy nut-brown ale."

50. dewlap, neck; properly used of the loose skin that hangs from the necks of cattle; see IV. I. 127.

51. wisest; said ironically. aunt, old woman.

54. "The custom of crying taylor at a sudden fall backwards, I think I remember to have observed. He that slips beside his chair, falls [just] as a tailor squats upon his board."

55. quare, old form of choir (Lat. chorus).

cough...laugh. The rhyme is perfect in the reading of the Quartos and Folios, coffe...loffe. Possibly loffe = laugh was then not far removed from the ordinary pronunciation. There was at least some uncertainty about the word; cf. Marston's Parasitaster (1606), Act IV, where a critic is said to have vowed "to leave to posteritie the true orthography and pronunciation of laughing." In the ballad of Mother Hubbard, the lady bought her dog a coffin and then came home to find him loffing (Halliwell). Old ballads often preserve old forms and idioms.

56. waxen, increase, i.e. grow merrier; see G.

neeze; a parallel form to sneeze, both from O.E. fnæðsan (from Icelandic root). Cf. Job xli. 18, "By his neesings a light doth shine."

57. wasted, spent; cf. v. 382.

58. room; = two syllables. Monosyllables containing diphthongs or long vowels—e.g. sleep, sweet, cold, speak etc.—since they allow the voice to dwell on them, often take the place of a whole foot; cf. moon, 7; three, III. 2. 437; new, IV. I. 40.

64, 65. I know when, I know occasions when.

66. Corin; a Latin name for a shepherd.

67. pipes of corn, the traditional "oaten flute" (Lycidas, 33) of shepherds; cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. 913, "When shepherds pipe on oaten straws." versing, making love in verses.

69. steep. The 1st Quarto has steppe (the word used of the great plains in Central Asia); the 2nd Quarto and Folios steepe. A few editors prefer the former reading, but most the latter, regarding steppe as merely a misspelling. It is doubtful whether steppe (a word of Russian origin) was known at all to Elizabethan writers. Also "steppe of India" seems a much less intelligible and pointed allusion than "steep of India," which would be readily understood—like Milton's "Beyond the Indian mount," Paradise Lost, I. 781—of the famous Himalaya chain in the north of India. As to Shakespeare's reason for associating Oberon with the remote East, see Introduction, p. xxviii.

70. bouncing, blustering, swaggering (as we should say of a man). Hippolyta was Queen of the Amazons.

71. The buskin (Lat. cothurnus), a boot with high heels, was worn by hunters and huntresses, e.g. by Diana (goddess of the chase) and her nymphs—cf. “silver-buskin’d Nymphs,” Milton, Arcades, 33. Hence Hippolyta, a great huntress (as she is represented e.g. in The Two Noble Kinsmen, I. I. 77–79), would be “buskin’d.”

73. For fairies blessing a marriage, see IV. I. 94, 95, V. 410–427.

75. Glance at, hint at.

78. Perigona; the name occurs as Perigouna in Plutarch’s Life of Theseus, whence also the allusions to the names in 79, 80.

79. Æglé; in the Quartos and Folios Eagles.

81. forgeries, idle inventions; or deceptions.

82. middle summer’s spring = the beginning of midsummer. Cf. “spring of day” = beginning of the day, 2 Henry IV, IV.

4. 35.

84. paved, pebbled.

85. in=on; cf. the Lord’s Prayer, “in earth, as it is in heaven.”

86. ringlets, small fairy-rings (see 9). to, to the sound of.

88–114. Upon the supposed allusion see Introduction, p. xii.

90. Contagious, pestilential, full of malaria.

91. pelting, paltry; see G.

92. continent = bank, i.e. that which contains (Lat. continere).

94. lost his sweat, expended his toil in vain.

95. hus, its; see G. beard, the prickles on the ears of corn.

97. murrion, infected with murrain (cattle disease); see G.

98. The nine men’s morris; also known as the nine rien’s merrils = F. jeu de méréelles: méréelles or méreaux being the F. word for the pawns or counters with which the game was played. It was a kind of open-air draughts or chess for two players, each having nine men or pieces, and moving them upon a diagram of three squares, one within the other, cut out of the turf. In winter-time or in bad weather, when the game was discontinued, the squares would naturally get filled up with mud etc. Cotgrave gives another name for it—fivepenny morris. Either morris is simply a corruption of merrils or else a morris-dance (see G.) was associated in some way with the game. Here the title of the “game itself is used for the diagram of turf on which it was played.”

99. mazes, labyrinths, i.e. figures marked out on village-greens for rustic sports such as the game called running the figure of eight (Steevens). The players, I suppose, would have to get from certain points to other points, following an intricate course marked out; if not often used, the course and the figure generally would soon be obliterated by the luxuriant ("wanton") grass and by rain.

101. human; this points the difference between men and fairies, for the latter, though not human, were considered mortal, i.e. subject to mortality or death (Steevens). In Huon of Bordeaux Oberon himself dies at the end of the romance. want, lack, are without.

here; a tempting emendation, which merely adds c, is cheer (merriment). But Titania means that the winter, like the other seasons, is changed, not in respect of its merriments alone, but altogether. 'Here' (she says), 'in this region made unhappy by us, men have not their proper winter: all is contrary to custom: e.g. no carol is heard, and "summer buds" bloom in the frost: such a season is not a winter.'

103. An allusion to the moon's influence on the sea, causing ebb and flow. Cf. Batman vppon Bartholome, 1582 (the standard work on science in Shakespeare's time), "the Moon...minister & Lady of the sea...draweth to hir [her] waters of the sea" (133). floods=seas.

104. washes, moistens, wets.

105. rheumatic diseases, i.e. those which produce a flux or flowing, such as catarrhs in the head, coughs, and colds; from rheum=moisture, a flowing of what were called the 'humours' of the body—Gk ῥέυμα, from ῥέω, to flow. Scan rheumatic (the Latin accent, from rheumāticus).

106. distemperature, disturbance of the elements and weather.

109. Hiems=winter (in Latin) personified. thin; a sure correction of the reading chinne (or chin) in the Quartos and Folios. Note how often c occurs in 108–110. thin, of hair; bald.

112. childing, fruitful, prolific; still a botanical term for some plants, e.g. 'childing daisy,' 'childing pink,' "which produce younger or smaller florets around an older (regarded as parent) blossom."

113, 114. mazed, bewildered. increase, produce. Cf. Psalm lxvii. 6.

116. debate, quarrel. dissension; scan as four syllables.

117. original, origin, or origina...s.

121. herchman, page; see G.

122. i.e. she would not exchange him for all fairy land.

123. votaress, one who has taken the vow (votum) of a community.

124. spiced, laden with spices=fragrant.

126. Cf. Tempest, I. 2. 376, "Come unto these yellow sands."

127. i.e. the traders embarked on the flood (sea); for the inverted order cf. Timon of Athens, IV. 2. 13, "A dedicated beggar to the air," i.e. a beggar dedicated to.

128. When, at which times.

138. stay, i.e. to stay. The omission of to with the infinitive was commoner then; we could not now say, "you ought not walk" (Julius Caesar, I. 1. 3). The idiom was a survival from the time when the infinitive, having its termination -en, did not require any to.

140. round, dance; see G.

145. chide, 'quarrel'; in III. 2. 45, 218, 'scold'; in IV. 1. 120, 'bark' (being often used of a loud noise). Trace the connection.

146. thou shalt not, i.e. go; cf. IV. 1. 25, "I must to the barber's," i.e. go. Such elliptical expressions, at once brief and clear, are thoroughly Shakespearian.

148-168. For the possible allusions see Appendix, p. 140. Some critics regard A Midsummer-Night's Dream as "almost certainly written for a court wedding at which Elizabeth was present" (Shakespeare's England, 1916, I. 98).

149. Since, when; used by Shakespeare = 'when' (i.e. 'ever since when') after verbs denoting recollection.

151. breath, notes; used = 'words' in III. 2. 44, and = 'voice' in Twelfth Night, II. 3. 21, "so sweet a breath to sing."

153. spheres, orbits; cf. I. 7, note.

155. thou couldst not. Puck, the homely rustic sprite who delights in rough jests, is "a spirit of a common rate" (III. 1. 157) compared with the ethereal fairy king and queen: hence the vision of Cupid is naturally hid from his grosser sight (Boas). In Kenilworth, xvii., Scott makes Raleigh quote lines 155-164 to Queen Elizabeth.

156, 157. cold, chaste. arm'd, with bow and arrows (I. 1. 169).

161. might, was able to; the preterite of may = can.

162. watery; applied to the moon ("the moist star," Hamlet, I. 1. 118) either because she controls the tides (see 103, note), or (as I think) in allusion to the Elizabethan view that she was what Milton (Par. Lost, v. 422) calls a "moist continent," drawing up moisture from this earth.

163. votaresse; so called because a "vestal" vowed to virginity.

164. Now a familiar quotation, like I. 1. 134. What makes a line or saying proverbial is often not the matter but the manner—some peculiar verbal beauty or literary artifice that stamps the words on the memory, e.g. assonance or alliteration, as here (m...m, f...f).

fancy-free, free from the power of love (see I. 1. 155).

165. bolt, arrow.

166, 167. now purple; cf. III. 2. 102, 103, IV. 1. 78.

168. love-in-idleness, the pansy or heart's-ease (viola tricolor). Cf. Cotgrave, "Herbe clavelée. Paunsie, Harts ease...loue or luue in idleness, two faces vnder a hood." The pretty fancy of the pansy changing from "milk-white" to "purple" seems to be Shakespeare's own; unless indeed he has transferred to it what Ovid (in the 'Pyramus and Thisbe' story) had said of the mulberry—viz. that the fruit, once "white as snow," became of "a deep dark purple colour" when the blood of Pyramus was shed at the foot of the tree.

174. leviathan, whale; see G.

175. i.e. I'll travel round the world = "compass the globe" (iv. 1. 102). Editors quote Chapman's play, Bussy D'Ambois, I. 1, "In tall ships richly built...To put a Girdle round about the world"; and other plays. Hence the expression either was or became proverbial.

176. forty; used constantly by Elizabethans, apparently as a significant number, where no precise reckoning was needed. Cf. Sonnet 2, "When forty winters shall besiege thy brow," and Coriolanus, III. 1. 243, "I could beat forty of them." Other numbers, e.g. 3 and 13, have become significant through some ancient belief or historical event; and perhaps 40 gained some mysterious import through the Scripture. Thus the wanderings of the Israelites lasted forty years, the fast of our Lord forty days—likewise the fast of Elijah (1 Kings xix. 8), and the stay of Moses on the Mount (Exod. xxiv. 18).

182. the soul of love; the most intense love.

184. another herb = "Dian's bud," iv. 1. 78.

190. slay...slayeth. The Quartos and Folios have stay...stayeth. In printers' type sl and st were then single letters (like fi and fl now), and the one might easily be mistaken for the other by the printer.

192. and wood, and mad; see G. The pun is obvious.

195. adamant, lodestone; see G.

196, 197. i.e. in drawing (attracting) my heart you draw that which for its trueness is very steel. A poetic 'conceit' (see Introduction, p. xi).

199. speak you fair, speak kindly to you; a common phrase.

201. nor; the negative repeated for the sake of emphasis.

203. spawiel, a type of fawning submissiveness.

208. worser; often in Shakespeare; the double comparative expresses emphasis. Cf. the emphatic superlative, "most worst," Winter's Tale, III. 2. 180, "most boldest," Julius Cæsar, III. 1. 121.

214. impeach, expose to reproach.

220. privilege, protection. for that, because: a conjunction on which it is depends. Some editors change the punctuation, removing the stop after privilege to the end of the line = 'Your virtue is my safeguard as regards that,' i.e. the danger pointed out by Demetrius.

224. in my respect, in my eyes, as I judge.

227. brakes, thickets.

230. Things are contrary: she follows him: he should follow her.

231. Daphne, a nymph, flying from Apollo, was changed into a laurel-tree (δάφνη), that she might escape him; so said the "story" in Ovid, Metamorphoses, I. 452-552.

232. griffin, a fabulous monster, supposed to have a head, wings and forelegs like those of an eagle, and to resemble a lion in the rest of its body. Apparently many people then believed that the griffin (which now lives only in the art of heraldry) did actually exist—say, somewhere in Central Asia, as Sir John Mandeville and other travellers reported. Low Lat. griffus, from classical Lat. gryphus = Gk. γρύψ.

235. stay, i.e. for. questions, talk, arguings.

243. a heaven of hell; cf. I. I. 207.

244. upon, by; cf. "perish on my sword," II. 2. 107; though there the prep. indicates rather 'place where,' here the 'instrument by which.' For upon = 'in consequence of, by (metaphorically), cf. Much Ado, IV. I. 225, "she died upon his words" (i.e. was killed by them).

249. Perhaps where = a dissyllable; but I should take it as one syllable and make wild thyme, on which the voice dwells, = three syllables. The reading whereon has no authority.

250. ox-lips, a kind of cowslip not often found wild. nodding, hanging its head as if in sleep. grows; the verb may be attracted in number to the nearer subject violet.

251. luscious, sweet; see G. Theobald proposed lush, to simplify the scansion. woodbine, honeysuckle, but see IV. I. 47, note.

252. musk-rose; "called Rosa Moschata, of the smell of muske: in Italian Rosa Moschetta: in French Roses Musques, or Muscadelles"—Gerarde, Herbal, 1597 ed., p. 1086. He describes it as having a flower "of a white colour" with "certaine yellow seedes in the middle," and says that it "is of most writers reckoned among the wilde Roses." Apparently, therefore, the musk-rose that Shakespeare meant was a wild, hedgerow species such as might well grow among the wild flowers of Titania's bank, i.e. quite a distinct species from the musk-rose, with pink flowers, now cultivated in gardens. (Gerarde's Herbal was the standard work on botany in Shakespeare's time) eglantine, sweet-briar. In Shakespeare's time town-life and country-life were not divided sharply as in these days of big cities: his reference to country-things (plants, animals, etc.) would be more understood and appreciated than now.

254. dances and delight, delightful dances (i.e. of her attendant fairies); an example of hendiadys, the figure of speech whereby one idea is expressed by two nouns or verbs connected by a conjunction. Thus Vergil expresses 'cups of gold' by 'cups and gold.'

255. throws, i.e. off, 'casts'; the skin cast off is the 'slough.' enamell'd, smooth and variegated like enamel.

256. Weed, robe, garment; see G.

257. streak, touch softly, i.e. anoint.

263, 264. Cf. III. 2. 347-351 (where Puck explains his mistake).

266. fond on, foolishly in love with.

267. In Lear, III. 4. 121, the "foul fiend" comes forth "at curfew and walks till the first cock": then fairies and spirits went home.

SCENE II

The scene is now changed to the locality of the "bank" just mentioned by Oberon (II. 1. 248-267).

1. roundel, dance in a circle; see G.

2. the third part of a minute. In the fairy-world, where everything is diminutive, even time is measured by the standard of shortness.

3. canker, a worm that eats into rosebuds; Lat. cancer, crab.

4. vare-mice, bats; still so called in the west of England; see G.

leathern wings; in the Midland counties "leathern wings" is a name for the bat; cf. Germ. ledermus, leather-mouse.

7. quaint, dainty, pretty; see G. spirits; probably = fairies.

8. offices, duties, employments, i.e. those mentioned above.

9. double, i.e. forked; cf. III. 2. 72.

11. Neither the newt (a kind of lizard; see G.) nor the blind-worm (i.e. slow-worm) is harmful; but both were then thought to be venomous; cf. Herrick, "Nor snake or slow-worm bite thee" (Hesperides, 1648, "The Night-piece"). The witches' cauldron in Macbeth, IV. 1, has "eye of newt" and "blind-worm's sting."

13. Philomel = Phylomela, a classical name of the nightingale.

14. lullaby; see G.

20, 25. The Folios assign the parts of the song thus.

20, 21. spiders, especially the field spider to which Titania would be exposed, are to be warded off because they also were considered venomous. Old medical writers and herbalists mention remedies for their bites; e.g. Turner (Herbal, 1568) recommends sothernwood as "good to be dronken in wine against the bitinges...of the feld [i.e. field] spider and of a scorpione." The insect was thought to suck the poison from flowers; cf. Lyly's Euphues (Arber, p. 100), "Is not poyson taken out of the Hunnysuckle by the Spider? venym out of the Rose by the Cancker?"—(cf. l. 3, note). The notion is seen in the A.S. word for spider, viz. attor-coppa = poison-cup.

27-34. Cf. II. i. 7. These so-called 'trochaic' lines have a dainty, tripping rhythm most appropriate to dainty fairy beings. Note how often, for this reason, Shakespeare makes his fairies speak in this verse. See especially Act. v, from l. 378 to the end.

80. ounce, a kind of lynx (felis uncia). Perhaps ounce is a nasalised form of Persian yūz, a panther or lynx. cat, wild cat; probably what was called the cat-o'-mountain.

31. Pard, leopard.

35-38. Alternate rhyme = a quatrain is a sure sign of early work; cf. III. 2. 122-125. troth; see G. comfort; cf. III. 2. 432.

45. i.e. do not mistake my innocent meaning.

46. i.e. true lovers understand each other instinctively: no mutual suspicion makes them misinterpret each other's words.

49. interchained, linked together; cf. knt, 47. The Folios have interchanged, i.e. exchanged.

52. A pun on lie = (1) lie down, (2) tell a lie. He is replying to Hermia's "do not lie" in l. 44.

54. beshrew; 'alas for my (ill) manners if etc.'

57. human, courteous, kind; the same word as humane.

58, 59. i.e. such as may well be said to become (= befit).

61. ne'er alter, may it never alter; the optative or imperative use of the subjunctive was commoner then than now; cf. end, 63.

65. i.e. she does not want all the sleep: he may have half.

66-83. Again a metre with inverted stresses and extra syllable, to be scanned thus: "Bút A|thénian | fòund I | nóne."

68. approve, test; Lat. probare, to try, prove.

71-75. See II. i. 260-264. Of course Oberon meant Demetrius and Helena; but as Lysander and Hermia too wear "weeds (dress) of Athens," by which Puck was to recognize the lovers, his mistake is natural (so he pleads, III. 2. 347-351).

73. Despised, i.e. that despised; Shakespeare often omits the relative where the sense leaves it clear what the subject of the verb is. It is another instance of Shakespearian brevity.

77. It seems best to scan the line thus: "Near this | lack-lóve |, this kíl | -court'sý." The first this may be stressed because said with emphatic contempt—Puck pointing at Lysander. The syllable that immediately follows a strongly accented syllable is liable to lose its own stress: hence the stress on love, not lack. Where a word occurs twice in the same line it is generally accented differently: hence the second this is unaccented, the stress falling on kill.

Shakespeare often intermingles an inverted rhythm with its opposite. Line 77 treated as above will correspond with l. 74:

"And hère | the má|den slée|ing soun|d."

78-81. Churl, boorish fellow. owe, possess. his, its.

86-88. darkling, in the dark. fond, foolish; see each in G.

89. my grace, the favour shown me, i.e. by Demetrius.

97. i.e. fly my presence as that of a monster.

99. compare with, seek to rival. sphery, starlike, celestial.

101. In Richard II, III. 2. 139 wound rhymes with ground.

103. run through fire = do anything; a proverbial figure of speech to express devotion.

104. shows art; so the Quartos; the 1st Folio has Nature her shewes art, the 2nd here shews art. Some editors adapt the 1st Folio reading and print Nature shows her art. Probably he quibbles (105) on bosom = 'front folds of the dress, stomacher'; cf. Twelfth Night, III. 1. 132.

111. The speech is a specimen of the strained style, dealing in somewhat affected diction (cf. 119, 120), and fanciful thoughts (cf. 121, 122), which is not uncommon in Shakespeare's early works.

114. raven...dove. A proverbial contrast (cf. Twelfth Night, v. 134); raven also alludes to Hermia's dark complexion (cf. III. 2. 257).

118. I...ripe not, I have not been mature enough. ripe, a verb.

119. i.e. now that I reach the highest point—the full development—of intelligence. skill, sagacity, mental discernment.

120. marshal, leader, director.

121. o'erlook, read, peruse.

126. nor never; emphatic repetition, as in II. 1. 201.

128. flout, mock at; cf. III. 2. 327.

129. Good troth; in good troth (truth).

sooth = truth; cf. forsooth.

132. gentleness, kindness, or 'good breeding'; cf. gentleman.

138, 134. Note of = by after a passive verb; a common idiom then.

139, 140. heresies, false doctrines. Experience shows that converts to a belief are often more zealous in its behalf than its old adherents (and proportionately more bitter against their own former belief).

143. address, direct, i.e. towards the purpose mentioned.

149. eat; the past tense = ate (which Shakespeare never writes).

150. prey, the act of preying.

153. an if; see G.

154. of all loves; an adjuration used several times by Shakespeare; cf. the Quarto (1622) in Othello, III. i. 13, "he desires you, of all loves, to make no more noise," where the Folio reading, for love's sake, shows the meaning of the phrase. Probably the original notion was 'out of'—as in the formula "of your charity"; then 'for the sake of,' 'by.'

ACT III

SCENE I

We should observe how Shakespeare follows his usual plan of bringing the complications developed in the first two Acts to a crisis in the third Act (i.e. about the middle of the piece). In this play we have had two sets of complications: (1) the troubles of the lovers, and the anointment of Lysander's eyes; (2) the dispute between Titania and Oberon, and the anointment of Titania's eyes. Therefore we may expect two crises—and we get them: (1) in this scene, the meeting of Titania and Bottom, whence strange results; (2) in the next scene, the meeting of the pairs of lovers, whence also strange results. And in each case the main cause of confusion is the love-juice.

2. pat, pat, exactly, just as it should be; see G.

4. tiring-house, where the actors changed their attire (dresses).

8. Cf. 67, 68, and note how Bottom is appealed to in any difficulty. bully Bottom = 'friend Bottom'; see G.

14. By'r lakin = by our ladykin ('little lady'), a diminutive of by'r lady = by our lady, i.e. the Virgin Mary. Cf. marry, I. 2. 111, note.

parlous, alarming; a corruption in popular speech of perilous.

16. when all is done, after all; cf. 'when all is said and done.'

21. more better; the emphatic double comparative; cf. Tempest, I. 2. 19, 20, "I am more better than Prospero."

25. eight and six, i.e. syllables—that is, alternate verses of four and three feet. It was a very common ballad-measure; cf. many of the ballads in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, e.g. the later version of the famous Chevy Chase—that which Addison criticised in the Spectator, 70, 74, and which runs throughout in this metre, thus:

"Erle Douglas on his milke-white steede,
Most like a baron bold,
Rode foremost of his company,
Whose armour shoné like gold."

27. eight and eight, i.e. lines of four feet, also a favourite measure of simple, popular verse; cf. e.g. St George and the Dragon in Percy's Reliques, and the famous "King Stephen was a worthy peer." In Elizabethan England a love of such poetry seems to have been common to all classes, and Bottom and his friends, though nominally Athenians, are really Elizabethan working-folk. Hence their mention of these familiar metres is natural. We shall find later that the prologue is in lines of five feet (v. 108 et seq.).

28-33. the ladies be afeard, see I. 2. 77, note.

33. your; on this colloquial use see I. 2. 95, note.

36-47. Malone pointed out that Bottom's advice may have been suggested by an incident which occurred at those festivities held at Kenilworth in 1575 in honour of Queen Elizabeth to which lines 148-154 of Act II. Sc. 1. are thought to refer.

The incident is related thus in the Harleian MS. 6395, in a collection of Merry Passages & Feasts by Sir Nicholas L'Estrange (died 1669): "There was a spectacle presented to Q. Elizabeth vpon the water, and amongst others, Harry Goldingham was to represent Arion vpon the Dolphyn's backe; but finding his voice to be very hoarse and unpleasant when he came to performe it, he teares of [off] his disguise, and sweares he was none of Arion; not he! but eene honest Harry Goldingham,—which blunt discoverie pleas'd the Queene better then [than] if it had gone through in the right way. Yet he could order his voice to an instrument exceedingly well." In view of II. 1. 148-154 I think it highly probable that Malone's suggestion is correct. If Midsummer-Night's Dream was ever performed before Elizabeth (as it surely was), she and many of her courtiers must have appreciated the point of the allusion.

40. defect, for effect; Gobbo makes a similar blunder, Merchant of Venice, II. 2. 152.

44. pity of, pity for = a bad thing for; cf. v. 230 (where on = of).

54. almanac. Almanacs are mentioned by an English writer (Roger Bacon) as early as 1267; but popular calendars such as Bottom meant were not in general use in this country till about 1550.

56. it doth shine. As the wedding of Theseus was to take place on the night of the new moon (I. 1. 9-11), there would certainly be a very scanty allowance of moonshine.

58. great chamber, the 'state-room' of the palace.

60. or else. This plan is adopted (see v. 136, 243).

61. bush of thorns; see v. 136, note.

62. disfigure; he means figure (cf. I. 1. 237). present = represent; a common use—cf. Tempest, IV. 167, “when I presented Ceres.”

71. rough-cast, a kind of plaster mixed with pebbles.

73. cranny, chink; see v. 164, note.

78. cue, catchword; it is the technical term on the stage for “words which when spoken at the end of a speech in the course of a play are the signal for an answering speech, or for the entrance of another actor.” Thus in 98 the signal for Pyramus to re-enter was “never tire”; see G.

79. hempen home-spuns, sons of toil in rough smocks. Cf. Volumnia’s contemptuous description of the “people” (plebs) as “woollen vassals,” Coriolanus, III. 2. 9. Suffolk was famous for the manufacture of hempen shirtings, smocks etc.

81. toward = about to begin. Cf. Hamlet, v. 2. 376.

84, 85. odious...odours; a stock joke; cf. Dogberry’s “comparisons are odorous,” Much Ado, III. 5. 18. “Flowers of odours” for “odours of flowers” is also meant as a joke. savour-s; an instance of the plural inflection es or s in Old English (see p. 158).

87. hath; Pope doth, i.e. doth savour. But why correct lines the point of which lies mainly in their incorrectness and absurdity?

90. Bottom when he reappears will be “a stranger Pyramus,” because Puck means to play some trick on him during his absence.

97. brisky, brisk; juvenal, youth (Lat. juvenis); eke, also. They are affected words or forms which Shak. ridicules. Here and in Love’s Labour’s Lost, III. 136, “my incony Jew,” perhaps Jew = jewel.

105. with an ass’s head. We must remember that witches were popularly supposed to have the power of working such transformations. Hence the more simple-minded portion of an Elizabethan audience would not regard the change in Bottom’s appearance as the humorous impossibility that it seems to us.

109–114. The passage is entirely in accordance with the traditional character of Robin Goodfellow (see Introduction, p. xxx). That spirits sometimes took the forms of animals was a mediæval superstition often alluded to.

112. a fire, i.e. a misleading light (ignis fatuus); see II. 1. 39.

119. you see an ass-head of your own, do you? “This was a cant Elizabethan phrase; that Bottom should use it, unconscious the while of his own condition, is excellent humour (tragicomic ‘irony’).”

122. translated, transformed, changed; so in III. 2. 32.

124. to make an ass of me, i.e. to make me seem a fool, stupid fellow; the same humour of unconsciousness as in 120.

128, 129. ousel; blackbird; see G. orange-tawny; cf. I. 2. 96.

130. throstle; a diminutive of thrush, but the same in sense.

131. little, shrill—"small" (I. 2. 52). quill, pipe; see G.

134. i.e. the cuckoo, whose note is simple and monotonous. Though used here as an adjective, plain-song is strictly a noun, and means 'a simple melody without variations'; see G.

137. set his wit to, match it against; cf. Troilus and Cressida, II. I. 94, "Will you set your wit to a fool's?"

138. give...the he, charge with falsehood.

139. cry 'cuckoo'; the bird's note was popularly thought to warn husbands mockingly of the ill-behaviour of their wives; cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 908, 909, "The cuckoo then, on every tree, Mocks married men."

143. thy fair virtue, the virtue of thy fairness (beauty); see I. I. 80, note. virtue, efficacy, power; see virtuous in G.

147. reason and love. Cf. the old proverb that 'a man cannot love and be wise,' from the maxim, amare et sapere vix deo conceditur.

150. i.e. I can jest when I choose to. gleek; see G.

161. jewels, e.g. pearls, coral.

163, 164. She will make Bottom's mortal (and rather solid) frame as light and ethereal as that of a spirit of the air.

169. apricocks, apricots; see G. dewberries, the fruit of the dewberry bush, a kind of bramble; they resemble small blackberries.

171. Herrick (Hesperides, 1648) makes "well bestrutted [=swollen] bees' sweet bag" one of the dainties in "Oberon's Feast." Was it a traditional article of fairy-diet, or did Herrick merely imitate Shakespeare? The honey-bag is the receptacle in which the bee carries her honey; see again IV. I. 13.

173. Cf. Herrick, "The Night-piece," "Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee," and "Oberon's Palace," where he describes how 'The glow-worm's eyes...serve here for shine' (i.e. to illuminate the fairy-palace). Again we wonder whether Herrick recollected Midsummer-Night's Dream, or whether both poets simply drew on popular folklore. Strictly, the light is situate in the tail of the female glow-worm.

174. have, get, bring; connect it with to bed and to arise. The general sense is—"to attend my love at bed-time and at his rising."

182. cry...mercy, beg pardon; a common phrase.

185. Cf. Merchant of Venice, IV. I. 402, "I do desire your grace of pardon." In this common expression desire=ask, entreat (as often in Shakespeare), and of='as regards'; so the literal sense of Bottom's words is, 'I shall entreat you in respect of closer acquaintance.'

187. Cobweb; an old-fashioned remedy to stop effusion of blood.

191. Squash, an unripe peascod (= the pod or husk that holds the peas); cf. Twelfth Night, I. 5. 165-167, "Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peascod."

197. your patience, i.e. submissiveness under the misfortune of being devoured by the cowardly giant, ox-beef: which misfortune (not, of course, the pungent strength of the mustard!) has often brought the tears into Bottom's eyes (I. 200)—a quibble that explains itself.

200. desire you of more. The Quartos, and Folios 1 and 2, have you more. Some insert of, as in 185, 193, which seems to me best; others print your more, the reading of Folios 3 and 4.

205. enforced, violated.

SCENE II

The "Story of the Play" in the Introduction (xlv-xlvii) makes clear the plot of this rather difficult scene.

2. next, i.e. immediately after she awoke = 'first.'

5. night-rule; see G.

7. close, private, retired.

9. patches, clowns; see G. mechanicals, mechanics, workmen.

18. shallowest, most stupid. Puck judges Bottom too hastily; his comrades regard him as their leader, with "the best wit" (IV. 2. 10).

thick-skun; then a common term of reproach = 'block-head.'

barren, i.e. of brains = 'dull.' sort, company; see G.

14. presented, represented; cf. III. 1. 62, 69.

17. nole, rather a vulgar word for 'head,' like 'noddle' or 'pate.' The same as knoll, a hillock. Also spelt nowl; cf. the duplicate forms jole and jowl = 'a cheek' (see 338, note).

19. mimic, actor; see G.

21. Note (1) choughs = jackdaws, (2) russet-pated = grey- (not red-) headed: a remarkably precise description of the jackdaw, which has grey plumage about the head and neck. For russet = 'grey'; see G. The change russet-patted, 'red-legged,' à pattes rousses (which would be applicable to the Cornish chough, not to the jackdaw) is needless.

many in sort, in a great body. sort; cf. I. 13, supra.

25. It has been objected that diminutive fairies could not be said to stamp; but why not, if they could "rock the ground" (IV. 1. 91)?

26. he, one; almost = 'another.'

36. latch'd, moistened. "To 'latch with love-juice' is to drop love-juice upon, to distil upon,...or simply to moisten" (Skeat); see G.

40. of force, of necessity; commonly perforce, as in l. 90.

41. Stand close, stand still; keep quiet.

44. breath, words; cf. iv. 2. 44.

48. o'er shoes; then a not uncommon phrase = 'somewhat.' It implies entering into a thing, but not very far, e.g. like a person wading a little way into water. Cf. Two Gentlemen of Verona, I. i. 24, "more than over shoes in love," i.e. rather deeply.

54. centre = the middle point of the earth; cf. Ben Jonson, Catiline, v. 6, "strike it through the centre, to the Antipodes."

55. her brother's, i.e. the sun's. with the Antipodes, among the people living on the opposite side of the globe.

57. dead, deadly; or perhaps 'deathlike.'

61. Venus, i.e. the planet; cf. 107.

62. What's this to, what has this to do with?

70. brave touch, a fine thing to do, a noble exploit (or 'stroke')!

71. worm, serpent; used in Antony and Cleopatra of the asp (serpent) with which Cleopatra killed herself (v. 2. 243, 256).

72. doubier; see II. 2. 9.

74. on a mispris'd mood, in mistaken anger; or, on a mistaken fancy. Probably the former; it is more suitable to mood = feeling (i.e. of anger, as the context shows). mispris'd, see G.

78. An if, see an in G. therefore, for that, i.e. in return.

81. whether often in Shakespeare metrically = a monosyllable.

84, 85. In plain prose—'loss of sleep (in which sorrow may be forgotten—cf. l. 435) makes sorrow harder to bear.'

86. Which, the debt, i.e. respite from sorrow. it, sleep.

87. his tender, the offer that sleep will make. his, its; see G.

90. misprision, mistake; see G., and cf. mispris'd above (74).

91. Some true love turned, i.e. turned false. We have already seen (though Oberon has not) how Puck's mistake has made Lysander false to Hermia (II. 2. 103-144).

92, 93. 'If (Puck means) some lover is to prove faithless because of my error, not through his own fickleness, lovers in general must not be held responsible for their faithlessness. The fault lies with fate, which ordains that for every one who is true there should be a million who break (= "confound") oath after oath.'

96. fancy-sick, love-sick; see II. i. 164. cheer, face; see G.

97. It was believed in Shakespeare's time that every sigh cost the person a drop of blood. Cf. "blood-consuming sighs" and "blood-drinking sighs," 2 Henry VI, III. 2. 61, 63.

costs; in Shak. a singular verb often follows a relative pronoun with plural antecedent, perhaps because the relative has no plural inflection.

99. against, i.e. so as to be ready for the time when. Cf. Genesis xliii. 25, "And they made ready the present against Joseph came."

101. Tartar; taken as a type of archer. In the geography of that time 'Tartary' included the ancient Parthia, and the Parthians were proverbial for their skill as bowmen.

102, 103. See II. 1. 165-168.

107. the Venus; cf. 61, note.

118. fee, payment.

114. fond pageant, foolish show. pageant; much the same as 'exhibition' in our colloquial phrase 'to make an exhibition of oneself.'

119. needs, of necessity; see G. alone, above all things—'without a parallel' (Schmidt). Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, IV. 6. 30, "I am alone the villain of the earth," i.e. without a rival.

121. preposterously, perversely.

124. vows so born, vows being so born; an absolute construction.

127. the badge, i.e. his tears. badge = token, mark: an allusion to the silver badges, engraved with their masters' crests, that servants of the nobility used to wear on the sleeves of their liveries.

129. Lysander once said that his vows to Hermia were true: now he says that his vows to Helena are true: the one truth conflicts with the other, and such a conflict is at once good and bad ("devilish-holy"): good because one truth wins, and it is well that truth should prevail; bad because the other truth is beaten, and it is ill that truth should ever fail. The line is simply one of Shakespeare's early 'conceits'; see II. 2. 111, note. In the next lines Helena changes her argument and says that his conflicting oaths (the two truths) will prove evenly matched, i.e. equally worthless.

131. nothing weigh, i.e. ascertain, or fix, no weight, because his oaths to her and to Hermia will exactly counterbalance each other.

141-143. i.e. 'that pure whiteness, viz. the snow of Mount Taurus, becomes black as a crow when thou etc.' Of course, turns is intransitive, white (=whiteness, as in 144) being the subject.

141. That = the famous, the well-known (Lat. ille).

Taurus, a mountain range in southern Asia Minor.

The comparison of a very white hand with "the fann'd snow" occurs again in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 375.

144. princess of, perfection of, paragon of; cf. the similar use of prince, e.g. in Troilus and Cressida, i. 2. 249, "Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!" Collier's conjecture impress = 'stamp' (to conform with the metaphor of seal) is a needless change.

seal, pledge; with the hand she pledges faith to her lover.

150. in souls, heartily, with one accord.

153. superpraise, overpraise. parts, qualities, gifts.

157 trim; cf. the ironical use of 'pretty,' e.g. 'a pretty idea!'

169 I will none, i.e. none of her, nothing to do with her.

171 to her, in its relation to her.

175 aby, pay for, suffer for; cf. 335 and see G.

188. yon fiery oes, the stars; o was used of anything that resembled the shape of the letter o; hence here = 'orb,' 'circle.' In Henry V, Prologue 13, the Globe Theatre which was circular (whence perhaps the name) is called "this wooden O"

194. false, wicked. in spite of, so as to spite. Cf. L'Allegro, 45, "Then to come, in spite of sorrow," i.e. by way of spiting.

195. Injurious, insulting; see G.

197. bait, harass (as dogs 'bait' an animal).

201. I keep the reading of the Quartos and 1st Folio, making O, with the pause before it, equivalent to a whole foot. Cf. Hamlet, iv. 4. 65, "To hídē | the sláin|. Ó, | from thís | time fóρθ." Abbott (482) gives similar instances. The 2nd Folio has ' O,' and is all."

203. artificial; here active = 'skilled in art, artful;' commonly passive = 'produced by art.' gods, because they "created" (l. 204).

204. needles; a monosyllable; cf. the old spelling neeld (in Piers the Plowman, nelde), which some editors print here. A.S. nédl.

205. sampler, wool-work in which patterns (i.e. samples) are designed—especially the alphabet. O.F. exemplaire, Lat. exemplar.

208. incorporate, make one body; for ate = ated see v. 412., note.

210. a union in partition, i.e. at once united and parted.

212–214. Outwardly they had two bodies, inwardly one heart: so in heraldry the double coats of arms that belong to man and wife as one person ("due but to one") have but one crest. The comparison is between 'two bodies...two coats' and 'one heart...one crest.'

213. of the first, of the former, i.e. bodies; an allusion to the heraldic terms 'the first,' 'the second' etc., used in descriptions of coats of arms to refer back to the divisions of a shield which have been already described.

215. Cf. Mat. vii. 6 (1611), "lest they...turn again and rent you."

220. amazed, utterly bewildered; a stronger word than now.

229. deny your love, disown, disavow, his love of you.

232. in grace, in favour, i.e. so fortunate.

233. hung upon; the metaphor is 'clinging to' a person.

237. persever. Always spelt thus in the 1st Folio, with the accentuation perséver; cf. King John, II. 421, "Perséver not, but hear me, mighty kings." sad, grave; see G.

238. Make mouths upon, i.e. in derision.

239. hold ..the jest up = (colloquially) 'keep it going.'

242. argument, subject of mirth; see G.

247. do not scorn; said to Lysander; Hermia still thinks that he is true to her and merely made fun of Helena in 245, 246.

250. prayers; so Theobald; the Quartos and Folios praise.

257. Away, Lysander is trying to free himself of Hermia who has just caught hold of him to prevent his fighting with Demetrius.

Ethiop, a term of contempt, like "tawny Tartar" in 263; see G. In Elizabeth's reign it was the fashion to depreciate dark complexions and hair, probably out of compliment to the queen herself, who was fair.

257-259. Demetrius means that Lysander is not feally trying to break loose from Hermia, i.e. that he is afraid to fight. He says with taunting irony: 'keep up the pretence; appear to wish to get free and follow me—though actually you are a coward (= "tame"). This seems the sense intended, but, almost certainly, the text is corrupt.

Note how under the stress of great emotion rhyme has been dropped (from line 195), as too artificial to express the feelings roused. It returns with the fairies (351).

258. take on, rage, rave. Cf. The Merry Wives of Windsor, IV. 2. 22, "he so takes on...so rails...so curses." as, as if.

260. burr, the prickly, clinging head of the burdock plant.

264. potion; so the 1st Quarto; the 2nd and Folios poison.

267, 268. A quibbling word-play on bond = (1) contract, pledge, (2) tie, fetter, viz. Hermia, who still holds Lysander.

271. It is now that Hermia realises the change in Lysander.

272. what news, either, 'what new thing is this?', viz. that Lysander hates her; or, 'what has happened?' (i.e. which has made him change towards her). The proposal "what means" is tempting.

274. erewhile, a little while ago.

282. you juggler, i.e. Helena. Scan jugg-e-lèr. canker-blossom, the worm that eats into blossoms (see II. 2. 3, note). Hermia means that Helena has eaten into and destroyed Lysander's love for her.

286. no touch, not a particle; or perhaps = 'no feeling.'

291, 292. urg'd, dwelt on, emphasised. Scan 292: "And with | her pérs'|nage, hér | tall pér|sonáge."

295. low, short.

296. Various references in old writers show that a "painted maypole" was a familiar object in Shakespeare's time. One painted with vertical stripes of white, red, and blue, stood in a village (Welford) five miles from Stratford—perhaps a copy of an earlier pole there that Shakespeare himself may have seen. A maypole depicted on an old window dating possibly from the reign of Henry VIII, at Betley in Staffordshire, has (or had) diagonal lines of black on a ground of yellow.

300. curst, ill-tempered, shrewish; cf. 341 and see G.

302. a right maid, a true maid. A common Elizabethan use; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, IV. 12. 28, "like a right gipsy."

for, in respect of; cf. IV. 2. 12, V. 234.

307. evermore, always.

310. your stealth, your stealing away = going secretly.

317. simple, i.e. in intellect = 'silly'; cf. Love's Labour's Lost, IV. 1. 142, "a most simple clown!" fond, foolish; cf. II. 2. 88.

324. vixen, a bad-tempered, quarrelsome girl; see G.

329. minimus, tiny creature; see G. knot-grass (Polygonum aviculare); popularly supposed to hinder (cf. "hindering") the growth of a child or animal. Steevens quotes Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, II. 2, "say they should put him into a strait pair of gaskins, 'twere worse than knot-grass; he would never grow after it."

330. bead; referring not only to her size (cf. "acorn"), but also to her complexion, the commonest sort of beads being black.

333. intena, direct, exhibit towards; or perhaps 'pretend'—cf. Much Ado, II. 2. 35, "intend a kind of zeal," i.e. feign.

336, 337. i.e. which of us has the better claim to Helena. Cf. Tempest, II. 1. 27, "Which, of he or Adrian, first begins?" The phrase combines, (1) 'whose right, thine or mine,' (2) 'which of our rights'

100 A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM [ACT III

338. cheek by jole, cheek to cheek, i.e. side by side, close together. jole, also spelt jowl; cf. nole or nowl (l. 17, note).

339. i.e. all this turmoil is due to you. coil; see G.

340. Cf. Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 4. 132, "I care not for her, I." The repetition gives emphasis.

345. stull, always, or constantly.<sup>1</sup>

347. shadows, spirits; cf. v. 430.

348, 349. Cf. II. 1. 263, 264; II. 2. 71-73.

352. sort, fall out.

353. jangling, quarrelling, wrangling.

355-357. It was a very old and widespread belief that fairies, spirits and magicians had the power to affect the heavenly bodies, especially the moon, and hide their light. Mediæval romances and poems are full of references—like these lines—to the superstition. Cf. Fairfax's translation (1600) of Tasso, ix. 15, "The moon and stars for fear of sprites were fled."

356. welkin, sky; see G.

357. Acheron, one of the four rivers of the classical Hades (Hell). Cf. Paradise Lost, II. 578, "Sad Acheron...black and deep."

358. testy, angry; Middle E. testif, headstrong; from O.F. teste, modern F. tête, 'head.'

359. As, that. another, the other.

364. Sleep has often (and naturally) been compared with death. Cf. Tennyson, In Memoriam, LXVIII., "Sleep, Death's twin-brother."

365. batty, like those of a bat. Tennyson (Maud I. xxii) compares night with a bat—"For the black bat, night, has flown."

367. liquor, juice. virtuous [see G.] property, peculiar efficacy.

368. hus, its; see G.

370, 371. Scan 'deris|i-ón,' 'vis|i-ón.'

378. date, duration; cf. King John, iv. 3. 106, "my date of life."

379. Cf. Cymbeline, II. 2. 48, "Swift, swift, you dragons of the night." In classical writers only Demeter (or Ceres), goddess of the Earth, is represented as being drawn in her chariot by dragons; cf. Ovid, Fasti, iv. 497, 561, 562. The chariot of Night (personified) is yoked with horses; cf. Statius, Thebais, II. 60, sopor obvius illi | Noctis agebat equos. So Milton speaks of "the Night-steeds," Nativity Ode, 236. Minute accuracy in such matters is not to be required of a poet. Milton often varies mythology to suit his purpose.

dragons, winged serpents; supposed not to sleep.

380. harbinger, forerunner; see G. The morning-star is meant.

381-387. The 'spirits' meant here are not fairy beings (cf. Oberon's words, 388), but the restless 'ghosts' of the dead, such e.g. as the ghost in Hamlet, who also 'fades' away at the approach of morning. See again v. 386-389.

382, 383. Formerly it was the custom to bury the bodies of executed criminals and self-murderers at cross-roads. Their spirits are here referred to; also those of persons "who, being drowned, were condemned (according to the opinion of the ancients) to wander for a hundred years, as the rites of sepulture had never been regularly bestowed on their bodies" (Steevens). Cf. the story of the sailor Archytas in Horace, Odes, i. 28.

386. Shakespeare always accents the verb exile; the noun both éxile (as now) and exile (Lat. exilium). See i. i. 151, note.

387. Cf. "Come, gentle...black-brow'd night," Romeo, III. 2. 20.

388. another, i.e. higher, "of no common rate" (III. i. 157).

389. Morning's love. Aurora (cf. 380), Greek Eos, goddess of the morn, loved Cephalus; but he remained true to Procris, his wife—wherefore Pyramus takes him as a type of loyal affection (v. 200). If Oberon hunted with him it was probably on Mount Hymettus, near Athens, his favourite hunting-ground. (The reference might be to Tithonus, also beloved of Aurora; but this is less likely.)

391. gate. Cf. the image in Psalms xix. 5 of the Sun coming forth "out of his chamber."

402. drawn, i.e. with drawn sword.

404. plainer, more level. F. plain, level, Lat. planus, flat.

418. rest me, i.e. myself. "Him, her, me, them, etc. are often used in Elizabethan, and still more often in early English, for himself, herself, etc."—Abbott, 223. Cf. "I do repent me," Macbeth, II. 3. 112; so "repent you" in the Prologue (113) in Act v. The addition of self (= 'same') only emphasises the reflexive sense.

421. Ho, ho, ho; the traditional cry of Robin Goodfellow or Puck; in the old ballad The Pranks of Puck each stanza closes with it, thus: "I answer nought, but ho ho, ho!" (Puck is the speaker).

422. I wot, I know; see G.

426. buy, pay for; the metaphor of aby.

435, 436. And sleep...Steal, i.e. and may sleep steal.

437-441. The measure has three feet, with an extra syllable at the end. Scan three (437) as a dissyllable; likewise comes (439)—thus: "Yét but | thréé? | Côme one | móre;" and "Hére she | cómes, | cúrst and | sád." See II. i. 58, note.

461. A proverbial expression for a happy ending (i.e. with a wedding) to a play or tale; cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 884, 885: "Our wooing doth not end like an old play;

Jack hath not Jill."

The association of Jack and Jill as generic names for a man and woman is very old (and familiar to all from the nursery-rhyme).

468. Another ancient proverb.

ACT IV

SCENE I

As a rule, the IVth Act is the least important in the scheme of one of Shakespeare's plays. It often marks a pause after a great crisis in the complications, and merely indicates how their solution is likely to be attained: the solution itself, i.e. the 'catastrophe,' being reserved for the Vth Act. But in Midsummer-Night's Dream the IVth Act is very important, because in it, as we shall see, the two sets of complications that formed the main subject-matter of Acts II and III are practically brought to an issue, and the marriage of Theseus is celebrated. Thus the way is cleared for the performance in Act V of the 'interlude' in honour of the marriage.

1. An Elizabethan theatre, though without moveable scenery, had minor pieces of stage-furniture, which could be taken on or off, to indicate change of scene. Titania's "flowery bed" would be the "bank of flowers" on which the Player King in Hamlet, III. 2, lies down, and the "bank" on which the moonlight sleeps in The Merchant of Venice (v. 1. 54, 55). See, Shakespeare's England, 1916, II. 269, 270.

2. Scan 'ami-able' as four syllables. coy, caress.

20. neaf, or neif, fist; rather a rustic word.

21. leave your courtesy. Probably Mustard-seed is bowing (as Titania commanded, III. 1. 177), and Bottom desires him to cease. Schmidt takes it = 'put on your hat'; but did fairies wear hats?

25. Cavalery Cobweb; it should be Pease-blossom (cf. 5-7); Cobweb has been sent to get the humble-bee. Either Bottom or the printer is in error. Cavalery; see G.

31. In attributing to Bottom ("the weaver") "a reasonable good ear in music," Shakespeare probably refers, with a touch of sarcasm, to the fact that weavers were supposed to be a musical race, addicted to singing, especially psalm-singing (many of them being Calvinist refugees from the Netherlands). A similar reference is 1 Henry IV, II. 4. 147. Cf. Tennyson's Queen Mary,

III. 4, "Ay, the psalm-singing weavers, cobblers, scum" (said by the Roman Catholic Gardiner).

Rough music. So Dyce; a direction of some kind seems desirable, to show that music is sounded. The Folios have "Musick Tongs, Rural Musick."

"The music of the tongs was produced, I believe, by striking them with a key" (Dyce). The bones, no doubt, were rattled in the manner practised by nigger minstrels.

35-38. a peck of provender etc.; see Appendix, p. 144, note.

36. your; the same familiar use as in I. 2. 95.

37. bottle, a bundle; see G.

38. fellow, equal, rival.

40. new = a dissyllable. Some editors insert thence after thee.

43. exposition; most likely he means disposition.

46. all ways, in all directions.

47, 48. Here I take woodbine = convolvulus; not = honey-suckle, as in II. 1. 251. The passage is much disputed; see pp. 141, 142.

48, 49. Classical poets often speak of the vine as married to the elm because trained to cling to its stem and branches for support. Shakespeare applies a similar thought to ivy, though the 'marriage' is rather implied ("female...enrings...fingers") than definitely expressed. Cf. Horace's lascivæ hederæ, 'wanton ivy' (Odes, I. 36. 20).

54. favours, presents, as in II. 1. 12; i.e. nosegays of flowers.

56. Cf. Richard II, III. 2. 160, 161, "the hollow crown That rounds the mortal temples of a king," i.e. encircles.

58, 59. dew...pearls; cf. I. 1. 211. orient, lustrous; see G.

63. patience; scan as in I. 1. 152, 'pâti-énce' (i.e. three syllables).

71. other = others (viz. the lovers); a frequent Elizabethan use; cf. the Prayer-Book, Psalm xlix. 10, "For he seeth that wise men also die...and leave their riches for other." In Old English other was declined and made its plural othre: when the plural inflexion e became obsolete, othre became obsolete, and for a time other was used for both singular and plural: this proved confusing, and a fresh plural others was formed by adding the ordinary plural suffix -s.

72. may all, all may.

74. a dream; see 197-199, note. fierce, wild, disordered.

78. Dian's bud; probably Shakespeare means the bud of the Agnus Castus or Chaste-tree, then popularly thought to have the power of inspiring chastity. The Flower and The Leaf, attributed to Chaucer, specially associates this shrub with Diana (ll. 472-475):

"That is Diane, goddesse of chastite,
And for because that she a maiden is,
In her own hond [hand] the braunch she beareth iwis,
That agnus castus men calle properly."

Burton mentions "Vitex or Agnus castus" among remedies for "Love-Melancholy" as having "a wonderful virtue," i.e. efficacy (Anatomy of Melancholy, 1806 ed. II. 354). Possibly this association of the tree with chastity was due to false etymology. The Greek name was ἀγνος; this was confused with ἀγνός, 'chaste,' whence the Latin title Agnus Castus. It was also called Abraham's Balm. (See Appendix, pp. 142, 143.)

Cupid's flower, the pansy, "love-in-idleness," II. I. 168.

87. The Quartos, and Folios 1 and 2, have, "Than common sleepe: of all these, fine etc."

five, i.e. Bottom and the two pairs of lovers.

88. charmeth, produces as by a charm.

Music, still, i.e. music sounds softly. still, an adverb. Probably some stringed instruments, with flutes, would be used.

90. Here probably louder music is sounded, in answer to Oberon's "Sound, Music!", and he and Titania execute some kind of dance.

91. rock, move up and down like a cradle.

92. new in amity, friends again. new = renewed.

93-95. See v. 398-427. solemnly, with due ceremony.

95. prosperity; so the 1st Quarto; the 2nd and Folios posterity.

100. sad, grave; see G.

102. Cf. Puck's "I'll put a girdle etc.," II. I. 175.

103. Swifter than etc.; cf. II. I. 6, 7. wandering; cf. Shelley's picture (in the lines "Art thou pale etc.") of the moon

"Wandering companionless

Among the stars that have a different birth."

It is one of those epithets that become 'perpetual' or traditional because precisely suitable. So for Horace (cf. vaga Luna—Sat. I. 8. 21) and Milton (Il Penseroso, 67) the moon is the wanderer of the heavens.

109. observation = observance in I. I. 167. Of course it is an anachronism to associate Theseus thus with May-day ceremonies. Shakespeare is thinking of Elizabethan England, not of the classical Athens. Similar inconsistencies occur in his tragedies of Roman history, Julius Caesar, Coriolanus, and Antony and Cleopatra.

110. i.e. since it is still early. vaward, forepart; see G.

111-116. The Knight's Tale (815-824) represents Theseus as very fond of hunting the stag, especially during May, accompanied by his "fayre queene", Hippolyta. Perhaps this gave Shakespeare a hint for the present hunting-scene.

115, 116. For the scansion cf. I. I. 149, note.

117, 118. Legend associated Hippolyta variously with Hercules. Perhaps she mentions him here out of compliment to Theseus, his "kinsman" (v. 47). The reference to his hunting in Crete may be due to the tradition that he rid the island of wild beasts, after he had captured the Cretan bull. At any rate, this last exploit connected him with the island, which was familiar (as Hippolyta doubtless knew) to Theseus also: there Theseus slew the Minotaur. Shakespeare has some method therefore in these allusions; but why he introduces Cadmus, the founder of Thebes, into the company, I cannot say—nor whether there ever were bears in Crete (which some editors deny, substituting boar).

118. bay'd, drove to bay; see G.

119. Spartan and Cretan (cf. 131) hounds were both celebrated. Ovid, describing the hounds of the famous hunter, Actæon, says that one was of Spartan breed, another of Cretan, and a third a cross between the two breeds (Metamorphoses, III. 208, 223). Probably it was from Golding's translation of the Metamorphoses—a favourite book with him—that Shakespeare gained his knowledge on the subject. Ben Jonson in The Satyre has, "The dog of Sparta breed, and good."

120. chiding, barking. Shakespeare uses chide of a resounding noise, e.g. of a blustering wind, As You Like It, II. I. 7.

121. fountains, springs; an obvious suggestion is mountains. Crete is a mountainous island.

124-131. The number of words connected with hounds and the chase deserves notice. There is a similar passage in Lyly's comedy Mydas (1592), IV. 3: "Such as you are unworthy to be... huntsmen; that know not when a hound is fleet, faire flew'd, and well hanged [i.e. with long ears]; being ignorant of the deepnesse of a hound's mouth, and the sweetness" [cf. "a cry more tuneable, 129].

125. so flew'd, having the same kind of flews = the large overhanging lip of the upper jaw of hounds and certain other dogs. Cf. the extract from Lyly's Mydas, above. so, i.e. like Spartan dogs.

so sanded, of the same sandy colour.

127. dew-lapp'd, with flesh hanging from the throat; see II. I. 50.

128, 129. i.e. matched in sound, like a chime of bells, successively lower and lower. It was a point considered in selecting and breeding hounds for a pack that their notes should form a harmonious 'cry.'

129. cry, pack of hounds; see G. Politely but firmly, Theseus intimates that no rival pack is superior to his! Quite the sportsman's touch. But naturally (cf. 127) his hounds were "slow."

136. wonder of, i.e. at; cf. "admire of," I. I. 231.

139. in grace of, in honour of.

140, 141. See I. I. 83-90.

144, 145. Saint Valentine, i.e. his day, viz. February 14th. It was a popular notion that on this day the birds selected their mates. Cf. Drayton, 'To his Valentine':

"Each bird doth choose a mate,
This day's St Valentine's."

The allusion is another anachronism.

147. you two, Lysander and Demetrius.

151-158. The confused style of the speech reflects Lysander's confused state. So in Paradise Lost, v. 30 et seq., when Eve wakes from her agitating dream, she begins by speaking in abrupt sentences.

152. sleep = sleeping. Shakespeare often makes one termination serve for a pair of words. Cf. Sonnet 80, "The humble as the proudest sail," i.e. humblest; Cymbeline, iv. 2. 347, "I fast and pray'd," i.e. fasted; Julius Cæsar, II. 1. 224, "fresh and merrily," i.e. freshly.

156-158. Cf. what Lysander said to Hermia when he proposed that she should "steal" away from Athens, I. I. 159-163.

157. we might; the sentence is incomplete: Egeus interrupts.

158. without the peril of, beyond danger of. For the opposite cf. Merchant of Venice, iv. 1. 180, "you stand within his dangcr."

159. you have enough, i.e. evidence against Lysander.

168. in fancy, moved by love.

176, 177. Cf. what Lysander said of Demetrius, I. I. 106, 107.

181. Only Demetrius remains under the influence of the love-juice; he is more impressionable than Lysander.

187. for, because. Since I. 110 some time has elapsed.

194. these things, their recent experiences. parted, divided.

196, 197. She has recovered Demetrius, but still feels insecure in her possession of him; just as a man feels insecure in his possession of a jewel which he has found, and which the owner may claim.

197-199. To all the victims of the fairies' tricks the events of the night afterwards seem a dream—alike to the lovers and to Bottom (cf. 210-212). So Oberon promised (III. 2. 370, 371).

210. a most rare vision. Cf. Titania's words in 81, and Oberon's in III. 2. 371. No doubt, the coincidence is intentional.

212. man is but an ass. The same unconscious humour in his choice of words as at III. 1. 119, 124. go about, endeavour.

215. patched, in a parti-coloured coat, the Fool's "motley" (i.e. alternations of red and yellow); see patch in G.

217. the eye...heard, the ear...seen. A very common sort of humour; cf. again v. 194, 195. It seems to me most improbable that Shakespeare intended any reference to 1 Corinthians II. 9.

225. at her death, i.e. Thisbe's. Theobald suggested "after death": Bottom, after dying as Pyramus, was to come to life again and sing the ballad. No doubt, it was not written; else Bottom would have proposed it instead of the Epilogue or "Bergomask dance," v. 360.

SCENE II

4. transported; either 'carried off' by the fairies, who were popularly credited with this power (see Appendix, p. 144), or 'removed,' i.e. to the next world—a euphemism for 'killed.' Cf. Measure for Measure, IV. 3. 71-73:

"A creature unprepared, unmeet for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is
Were damnable."

For the sense 'transformed' there seems to be no parallel.

6. it goes not forward, it cannot take place.

8. discharge, perform; as in I. 2. 95.

9. the best wit of any...man. This combines (1) 'the best wit of all men,' (2) 'a better wit than any man'; see v. 250.

13. paragon, model, pattern. It is amusing that Quince, the 'manager' of the company, who at the rehearsal in Act III was very sharp with the others when they blundered, should now be himself corrected—by Flute too whom he reprimanded so (III. 1. 102).

14. a thing of naught, a worthless thing; see naught in G.

18. made men, i.e. our fortunes had been made; cf. I. 2. 39.

19, 20. Probably an allusion to the case of some actor who had received a pension from Queen Elizabeth. Steevens notes that Thomas Preston, author of Cambyzes, acted before Elizabeth at Cambridge in 1564, "and the Queen was so well pleased, that she bestowed on him a pension of twenty pounds a year, which is little more than a shilling a day." In view of the probable allusion to his Cambyzes in I. 2. 11-13 the reference here might well be to him. I find a somewhat similar passage in Ben Jonson's Masque of Christmas, performed before James I in 1616, where a boy is supposed to act for the first time before the court and his mother asks the Master of the Revels, "How does his majesty like him, I pray? Will he give eight pence a day, think you?" Perhaps such passages were meant as a hint to the monarch to patronise the stage more liberally. Note that sixpence in Shakespeare's time = 4s. (about) of modern money.

Enter Bottom. When he left the wood and returned to Athens, his head full of thoughts of the play (iv. 1. 223-225), Bottom must have gone, not to his own home (cf. i. 1) but to the palace, to learn what had been decided with regard to the play. From the palace he has hurried straight to Quince's house, expecting to find the "company" assembled there. Hence he has later information than his friends. He knows that the duke "hath dined" (35)—though not long since, for see what Snug said, "the duke is coming" etc.: also that their piece is "preferred" (39). Would any one of the others have been so quick to perceive, so prompt to do, just the right thing? or so resolute in deferring all questions about his adventures till afterwards? Probably not; but Bottom has "the best wit" etc.

26. these hearts, these good fellows; heart, especially with 'good' or 'dear,' is a friendly form of addressing persons. Cf. Tempest, i. 1. 29, "Cheerly, good hearts!" and i. 2. 305, "Awake, dear heart!"

27. courageous; cf. the colloquial use of brave = 'fine.'

29. I am to, i.e. I have wonders to tell—but not now.

36. strings, with which to fasten on their false beards.

37. pumps, light shoes (commonly for dancing); "so called because used for pomp or ornament" (Skeat). The ribbons with which they were adorned were often formed into the shape of flowers. Cf. Romeo, ii. 4. 64, "my pump well flowered." The masquers in Browne's Inner Temple Masque (1614) wore "green pumps and roses done on with silver leaves."

39. the short and the long is = 'to put the matter shortly.' We say (colloquially) "the long and short of it is."

preferr'd, presented for approval. Philostrate has placed it on the list to be submitted to Theseus (v. 42, 43, 61-70).

44. breath; there is a quibble on its ordinary sense and on the meaning 'words' (cf. iii. 2. 44). Note also the quibble on "sweet"—"sweet breath," "sweet comedy."

ACT V

Two elements of the plot have been disposed of in Act IV, viz. the dispute between Oberon and Titania, and the troubles of the lovers. The several marriages too have taken place, and Bottom has been freed from his predicament. Hence there is nothing to stand in the way of the 'interlude'—practically the only remaining element of the plot.

A very happy and artistic feature of this Act is the introduction of the fairies at the close. The play might easily have been made to end after the performance of the 'interlude,' i.e. about l. 377. But Shakespeare introduces Oberon and Titania, and brings them into marked connection with the marriage of Theseus and the other marriages, so as to link Act V with Acts II-IV (in which the fairies played so conspicuous a part). This connection was indicated at the first appearance of the fairy King and Queen, II. 1. 68-76; it was made clearer in IV. 1. 93-97; and now it is brought into prominence, to show that the fairy interest of the play is closely allied to the human interest—i.e. that A Midsummer-Night's Dream has 'unity' of interest, if not of action.

2. may, can; the original sense; cf. Germ. mag.

3. antique, odd; see G. fairy toys, fanciful ideas, idle tales.

4. seething, heated, excited.

5. shaping fantasies, imaginations quick to body forth; cf.

14, 15.

5, 6. apprehend=imagine, conceive. comprehend=understand.

8. all compact, entirely composed of.

10, 11. He is "frantic" because he sees in the face of a dark-complexioned woman (cf. III. 2. 257, note) beauty worthy of Helen of Troy. Helen, one of the most conspicuous figures of mediæval (as of classical) literature, is constantly taken as a type of perfect beauty.

brow of Egypt, the brow (i.e. face) of a gypsy, which is a corruption of Egyptian, due to the belief that the gypsies came from Egypt.

Note how dignified and restrained Theseus himself is in his love-making, and contrast the other lovers.

16. airy nothing, what is unsubstantial, non-existent.

18. tricks, art, dexterous contrivances.

21. i.e. when one imagines some object or cause of fear.

23-27. 'The account of their experiences and the fact that the feelings of them all have been so changed prove that what they say cannot be due to mere imagination. The story, however strange, has consistency ("constancy").' witnesseth, bears testimony to, attests.

27. admirable, to be wondered at; see G.

32. masques. See G.

34. after-supper; cf. Richard III, iv. 3. 31, "Come to me... at after-supper." Probably the rear-supper or banquet (as it was variously called) is meant. It was a course of sweetmeats, fruit and wine, served after the principal supper, generally in another room, i.e. a 'dessert.' Some, however, take after-supper = the interval between supper and bed-time.

35, 36. Shakespeare is thinking of the Master of the Revels, an important official at the English court in the 16th and 17th centuries.

38. Philostrate; the Folios Egeus; clearly an error—cf. i. 1. 11. Probably the two characters were played by the same actor.

39. abridgement, something to abridge, while away the time.

42. brief, list; see G. ripe, ready; so the 1st Quarto; the 2nd Quarto and Folios rife = prevalent, in fashion.

44-60. According to the Quartos, these lines are spoken entirely by Theseus. According to the Folios, the extracts from the list of plays are read out by Lysander (i.e. the couplets printed as quotations); and only the comments on each extract are spoken by Theseus.

44. the Centaurs; according to Greek mythology, a race living in Thessaly, who were half-horses, half-men. Line 47 implies that the "battle" here referred to is not their famous contest with the Lapithæ, but an incident in the life of Hercules, who, while in pursuit of the Erymanthian boar, was attacked by the Centaurs, but repulsed them.

47. my kinsman. A detail probably due to the Life of Theseus in North's Plutarch—"they [Theseus and Hercules] were near kinsmen, being cousins removed by the mother's side." So in The Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 66, Theseus refers to Hercules as "our kinsman."

48, 49. the Thracian singer, Orpheus; said to have lived in a cave in Thrace. "His grief for the loss of Eurydice [his wife] led him to treat with contempt the Thracian women, who in revenge tore him to pieces under the excitement of their Bacchanalian orgies" (Classical Dict.). Cf. Paradise Lost, vii. 34, "that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard."

Ovid tells the story fully, Metamorphoses, xi. 1-55, and Shakespeare probably read it in Golding's version.

50. an old device. There may have been some Elizabethan play or masque on this subject. device, performance; see G.

52, 53. On the allusions traced here see Introduction, p. xiii.

54. critical, censorious, carping.

55. not sorting with, not in accordance with; cf. Henry V, IV.

1. 63, "It sorts well with your fierceness," i.e. agrees with.

56, 57. Cf the similar ridicule in I. 2. 111-113 of the affected titles given by some Elizabethan writers to their plays and poems.

59. strange snow. We might have expected some epithet in contrast with "snow," as "hot" is in contrast with "ice"—e.g. "swarthy snow" (Staunton's emendation). Then we should have a pair of similar, strongly antithetic, phrases; and the fanciful notion "swarthy snow" would answer to the fanciful notion "tedious and brief" (for "tedious" is not naturally applied to brevity), just as "hot ice" does answer to "merry and tragical." Still, though the gain in symmetry might be an improvement, there is no absolute necessity for any change; moreover, the existing text is supported by the fact that Shakespeare twice uses the phrase "wondrous strange," viz. in 3 Henry VI, II. 1. 33, and Hamlet, I. 5. 164, "O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!" An ingenious proposal is—"and, wondrous strange! jet snow," i.e. black.

wondrous; scan as a trisyllable = wônd-e-roûs.

65. fitted, i.e. to his part = suited; cf. I. 2. 67.

68. When did Philostrate see the play? Not at the rehearsal (which was the first) in Act III, nor after the rehearsal, for who was there to take the part of Pyramus? It is clear (IV. 2. 1-24) that Quince and his friends never thought of playing the piece without Bottom. Perhaps the play was "preferred" (IV. 2. 39) before Philostrate saw it rehearsed (he may have been attracted by the title), and there was a final rehearsal, to which he here alludes, after the actors, in accordance with Bottom's instructions (IV. 2. 37), had met at the palace.

70. passion, emotion; see G.

74. tol'd, exerted. unbreath'd, unpractised, unexercised. Shakespeare uses breathe = to take exercise; cf. Hamlet, V. 2. 181.

75. against, in preparation for. nyctial; cf. I. 1. 125.

77. not for you, not fit for, worthy of, you.

80. stretch'd, strained, exaggerated. conn'd, learned; cf. I. 2. 102.

88, 89. kind...kinder; probably an intentional quibble.

90. i.e. "take in good part even their blundering attempt" (Rolfe).

91, 92. i.e. in accepting what "poor duty" offers, noble courtesy or consideration regards the ability of the performer, not the merit of the performance. Probably the text is corrupt; Coleridge proposed:

"And what poor duty cannot do, yet would,
Noble respect takes it," etc.

93. clerks, scholars. The lines (93-99) seem like an allusion to the royal visits to the Universities. Queen Elizabeth visited Cambridge in 1564 and Oxford in 1566.

95. where, on which occasions.

96. periods, full stops. Cf. Earle's Characters, 1628, 'A Sergeant.'—"He is the Period of young Gentlemen, or their full stop" (Arber's ed. p. 57). Cf. period='end,' e.g. in 1 Henry VI, iv. 2. 17, "The period of thy tyranny approacheth," i.e. the conclusion of.

101. fearful, full of fear, timid.

105. to my capacity, in my opinion. to, according to.

106. Prologue, the speaker of the prologue, who wore always a black velvet cloak.

address'd, ready; see G.

107. Flourish, a set of loud notes on the trumpet. It was customary to usher in the speaker of the Prologue thus, so that the audience might know that the play was about to begin and cease from conversation.

108-117. The main point of these lines is that the speaker exactly reverses by mispunctuation the sense of what he wishes to say. The student should re-punctuate the passage correctly. In the comedy Roister Doister (1551 circa) a lover's letter is similarly perverted, so that he is made to tell his "sweet Mistress" that he does not care for her at all, only regards her money, and is sorry to hear of her welfare.

113. *mind*ing, intending.

118. stand upon points, mind his stops (cf. F. point); but there is a quibbling allusion to the phrase 'stand upon points' = be over-scrupulous; cf. 3 Henry VI, iv. 7. 58, "wherefore stand you on nice points?" = 'why are you so particular?'

123. A recorder (or record) was a kind of flute or flageolet with mouthpiece; cf. the title of a musical work published in 1686, "The Delightful Companion, or Choice New Lessons for the Recorder or Flute"; and Paradise Lost, i. 551, "flutes and soft recorders." It was so called, in allusion to its sweetness of sound, from the verb record = 'to sing'; cf. Fletcher, Pilgrims, v. 4, "how the birds record!"

124. not in government, not under control; the player cannot regulate the instrument's 'stops' or holes (usually six) for the passage of air. Hamlet, holding a recorder, says, "govern these ventages [= stops] with your fingers and thumb" (III. 2. 372, 373).

128-152. It has been objected that the speaker who delivers these lines correctly cannot be the same as the speaker who made such nonsense of ll. 108-117. But Quince, very likely, heard what Theseus and Lysander said as to his neglect of the "points," and is now more careful. Perhaps too he was a little nervous at the outset and spoke hurriedly; while the other characters enter he has time to collect himself. Also this passage is really an easier piece to learn and recite than the first part of the Prologue, being plain narrative.

130. Shakespeare has based this 'interlude' upon the story of 'Pyramus and Thisbe' in Ovid's Metamorphoses, iv. 55-166, of which he had read Golding's translation.

136, 137. Tradition varies as to 'The Man in the Moon.' "Some say it is the man who picked up a bundle of sticks on the Sabbath day (Numbers xv. 32-36). Dante [Inferno, xx. 126, Paradiso, II. 50] says it is Cain, and that the bush of thorns is an emblem of the curse pronounced on the earth: 'Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee' (Gen. iii. 18). Some say it is Endymion taken there by Diana" (Brewer, Reader's Handbook). Grimm mentions another view, that the man is "Isaac bearing a burthen of wood for the sacrifice of himself on mount Moriah." Grimm notes that the myth is an attempt to explain the 'spots' in the moon, i.e. the unevennesses on its surface.

A passage in Jonson's Masque News from the New World (1620) illustrates these lines: some one says that a messenger from the moon has arrived on earth, and this dialogue ensues:

"Factor: Where? Which is he? I must see his dog at his girdle, and the bush of thorns at his back, ere I believe it.

Herald: These are stale ensigns of the stage's man in the moon."

139. Cf. Golding's translation of Ovid:

"They did agree at Ninus Tombe to meet without the towne,

And tarry underneath a tree that by the same did grow:

Which was a faire high mulberie with fruite as white as snow."

The line in Ovid (Metam. iv. 88) says convenient ad busta Nini. The "towne" referred to is Babylon. Ninus, the supposed founder of Nineveh; husband of Semiramis, queen of Babylon.

140. grisly, grim, terrible. Either Quince (or the printer) is in error and the line ought to end "which by name Lion hight" (i.e. for the rhyme); or else a verse with the rhyme to name is lost.

Lion; in Ovid a lioness. hight, is called; evidently regarded by Shakespeare as an archaic, affected word. The "fantastical Spaniard" Armado in Love's Labour's Lost, I. I. 258, uses it; see G.

143. fall, let fall.

144. bloody; it had just killed some oxen (Ovid, Metam. iv. 96, 97).

147-150. The ridicule here and later of excessive alliteration is, I suppose, mainly directed against the Euphuists. Alliteration, not rhyme, was the basis of Anglo Saxon poetry: when rhyme came into vogue, alliteration was less used; but it had been revived in an exaggerated form by the Euphuists, and became one of the marked characteristics of the writers who, imitating Lyly, the author of Euphues (1578-1580), cultivated a strained, artificial diction and style. Love's Labour's Lost contains much satire of Euphuism and contemporary affectations; and one of these affectations ridiculed in the person of the pedant Holofernes (cf. iv. 2. 56) is the abuse of alliteration. The judicious use of this literary artifice may be illustrated from all Shakespeare's works.

148. broach'd, stabbed, literally 'spitted'; F. broche, a spit. Or the metaphor might be 'tapped'—as in 'broaching a cask.'

149. tarrying...mulberry. From Golding; see 139, note.

164. cranny. Cf. Golding: "The wall that parted house from house had riven therein a cranie" (i.e. the houses of the respective parents of Pyramus and Thisbe).

sinister, left; Lat. sinister, on the left hand. Shakespeare always accents sinister, as in the Latin word (see I. 1. 151, note), not simster, as now. Cf. Henry V, II. 4. 85, "'Tis no sinister nor no awkward claim."

170. Silence! In the Elizabethan theatre it was a constant complaint that the "gallants" (i.e. young men of rank and fashion) used to disturb the performers by talking and ridicule. S. may have this in mind here and in the similar scene of the "Nine Worthies" in Love's Labour's Lost. See Shakespeare's England (1916), II. 278.

171. grim-look'd, grim-looking. This use of the termination -ed = -ing or -ful was common. In Elizabethan English the use of the participial and adjectival terminations was not so regular as now.

183. sensible, capable of feeling (since the wall was Snout).

188. pat; exactly; see G.

198, 199. Limander, Leander, who swam across the Hellespont to visit Hero of Sestos (not Helen, as Thisbe says). He is often taken as a type of the devoted lover. For Elizabethans the story became famous through Marlowe's Hero and Leander (1593).

200. Shafalus, Cephalus. Procrus, Procrus. See III. 2. 389 note.

205. 'tide, betide—"whether life or death befall me."

208. mural down. The Quartos have Moon used (clearly a corruption of the text); the Folios morall downe, whence Pope conjectured mural = mure, 'wall.' An obvious suggestion is mure all downe.

210, 211. i.e. a wall which heard what the two neighbours said, without warning them of its power, would soon be pulled down (when that power was discovered). For though "walls have ears," as the old proverb said, no one likes walls which use their ears and learn people's secrets.

213, 214. i.e. the best players or play-writers can give but a shadowy, faint representation of life, and the worst can do so much—if their deficiencies are 'amended' by the imagination of the audience. So in the Prologue to Henry V Shakespeare says that what the play loses through inadequate performance the imagination must make good. See some further remarks, pp. 145, 146.

227. The Quartos and Folios have A lion fell, and the natural sense of the passage with that reading is—"Know that I, Snug the joiner, am a fierce lion." But Snug wishes to say that he is not a lion. Therefore, to give the text the required negative sense, some explain that nor qualifies what precedes as well as what follows—in fact, that neither is simply omitted before A lion fell. There are cases where Shakespeare omits neither, but I cannot believe that this is one; the pause after fell seems fatal to this view. Some boldly print No lion fell. Others hyphen lion and fell and take fell = 'skin,' as in Lear, v. 3. 24; then Snug is made to say that he is only 'a lion's skin' (for of course he would be dressed up in one). A clever suggestion is nam (in 226), an archaic contracted form of ne + am = am not.

243. horned; apart from the reference to the horns of the moon (cf. 246), there may be a glance at the material of Moonshine's lanthorn; horn was generally used for lanthorns instead of glass.

246. no crescent, not a waxing moon, i.e. "in the wane" (258).

250. the greatest error etc. Two constructions are combined: (1) 'the greatest error of all,' (2) 'a greater error than the rest.' Cf. iv. 2. 9, note. That this idiom, though illogical, is natural, is proved by the fact that it existed independently in Greek and in English. An extreme form of it is Paradise Lost, iv. 323, 324:

"Adam, the goodliest man of men since born

His sons, the fairest of her daughters, Eve."

There in the second line the constructions united are: (1) 'Eve, fairest of women,' (2) 'Eve, fairer than her daughters.' As the line stands it makes Eve one of her own daughters. Analyse the first verse—"Adam the goodliest etc."—in the same way.

253. for the candle, i.e. because of.

254. There is a quibble on the two words snuff. Besides its obvious sense, in snuff means 'to be angry, offended.' Cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 21, 22:

"Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll mar the light by taking it [the meaning] in snuff"; i.e. by being vexed at it. In this phrase snuff is connected with snuff (a sign of annoyance) and distinct from snuff, the wick of a candle.

268. The scene has changed, and the change would be indicated by bringing on the stage some piece of furniture more or less suggestive of a "tomb." Nimby's; Thisbe forgets Quince's correction, III. 1. 100.

274. moused. The lion shakes and tears Thisbe's mantle as a cat does a mouse.

288. dole, grief; Lat. dolor. We still use doleful.

289-291. The three Fates—Gk Moîpai, Lat. Parcae—were Clotho, who held the distaff; Lachesis, who wove the web of each man's life; and Atropos, who cut the threads with her shears when the web was complete, i.e. the man's life ended. See again 343-348. If Pyramus means to identify the Fates with the Furies, cf. Lycidas, 75, "Comes the blind Fury with the abhorred shears," i.e. Atropos.

291. thread, the warp, i.e. the threads extended lengthwise in the loom. thrum, the tufted ends of these threads, i.e. where they are fastened to the frame (see G.). Hence figuratively to "cut thread and thrum" = 'to cut everything, good and bad.'

292. quail = quell, in origin and—here—in sense, i.e. 'to kill'; cf. the noun quell = 'murder,' Macbeth, I. 7. 72. A.S. cwellan = 'to kill.'

298. passion, violent sorrow; cf. 321 and see G.

299. cheer; probably 'face,' as in III. 2. 96; see G.

312. die...ace. There is a double play on words, Demetrius alluding to dice, of which die is the singular, and pronouncing ace (a single spot on a die) = ass (cf. 317). Cf. Timon of Athens, v. 4. 34, 35:

"by the hazard of the spotted die

Let die the spotted" (i.e. the wicked).

Demetrius seems to be fond of puns; cf. 253, 254.

317. prove an ass. There is a point, an 'irony,' in this remark that Theseus is not aware of: Bottom has already "proved an ass."

318. How chance. See I. 1. 129, note.

324. mote = 'the smallest thing imaginable, an atom.' Spelt moth in the Quartos and Folios, as often then; cf. Florio (1598), "Festucco...a moth, a little beame" (i.e. of dust).

325-327. The Folios omit from he for a man down to God bless us; no doubt, because of the statute of James I forbidding profanity on the stage. The editors of the 1st Folio (1623) observed this statute either by omitting an objectionable passage or phrase, as here, or by making some slight change, e.g. Heaven or Jove for God. Cf. Richard II, I. I. 187—Quartos, "O, God defend my soul;" Folios, "O, Heaven defend."

330. moans; so Theobald reads; the original texts have means, possibly = menes from an old word menen, to lament, cognate with moan (Ritson). videlicet; in lit. sense, 'you may see' (videre licet).

342. eyes...green; then considered a peculiar beauty. Thus in Romeo, III. 5. 222, the Nurse, praising Romeo's rival, Paris, says that an eagle "Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye," as Paris has. Cf. also The Two Noble Kinsmen, V. I. 133, "thy rare green eye," where Skeat notes that "Dante [Purgatorio, xxxi. 116] uses the word smeraldi (emeralds) to denote the eyes of Beatrice."

343-348. Editors quote a similar passage, meant seriously, from a well-known play of that time—Damon and Pythias, by Richard Edwards—and some believe that Shakespeare intended these lines as a parody of it. What seems to me quite certain is, that the extravagant style of the speeches of Pyramus and Thisbe is meant by Shakespeare as a parody, not perhaps specially of any one play, but generally of a class of plays, such e.g. as Kyd's much-ridiculed Spanish Tragedy (1592).

343. Sisters Three, i.e. the Fates; see 289-291, note.

347. shore, used here instead of shorn for the sake of the rhyme.

351. my breast imbrue, shed the blood of my heart.

360. a Bergomask dance, a rustic sort of dance; see G.

362, 363. no epilogue...no excuse. In the Epilogue the author and the actors generally apologise for the defects of the piece or of its representation. Hence in the (prose) Epilogue to As You Like It Rosalind says, "a good play needs no epilogue." Shakespeare's avoidance of Epilogues is marked. There is one in rhyme to The Tempest, but its authorship has been suspected. Puck's apologetic speech at the end, 430-445 is really an Epilogue, though not marked as such.

374. palpable-gross, so gross (i.e. 'clumsily realistic,' 'crude') that everyone can feel, perceive, its crudeness. Lat. palpare = to feel.

375. Cf. Henry V, IV. chorus, 20, "tardy-gaited night," i.e. slow in passing. Contrast "hasty-footed time," III. 2. 200.

378. The play might have ended here; but the fairies are introduced again to round it off with their blessings, so that we may feel that this supernatural element is a sort of enveloping atmosphere.

379. howls, howls at; the original texts have beholds. The change seems certain; cf. As You Like It, v. 2. 119, "'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon."

381, 382. fordone, wearied; see G. wasted, consumed.

383-385. For the note of the owl (i.e. screech-owl) regarded as an evil omen or portent of death, cf. Lucrece, 165, "No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries." So in Macbeth, II. 2. 3.

378-389. See III. 2. 381, 382. church-way, leading to the church.

391. triple, so called because ruling in three capacities—as Luna or Cynthia in heaven, Diana on earth, Proserpina in hell. Vergil, Æn. IV. 511, calls her tergemina Hecate, and Ovid, Metamorphoses, VII. 177, speaks of Diana as diva triformis. Of course, the "team" drew the chariot in which she rode as Luna (goddess of the moon).

In poetry Hecate is often treated as only two syllables. Cf. Comus, 135, "Wherein thou ridest with Hecat', and befriend."

396, 397. Halliwell gives an old woodcut (date 1628), in which Robin Goodfellow or Puck is represented with a large broom. It was a traditional belief that these domestic fairies were very cleanly and encouraged cleanliness.

397. To sweep...behind the door. "A common practice" (says Farmer) "in large old houses, where the doors of halls and galleries are thrown backward, and seldom or never shut."

402. this ditty. Apparently, the song has been lost.

403. it; the pronoun does not refer to "ditty"; it is merely a cognate accusative referring with a certain emphasis to the action expressed by the verb. The idiom is common in Elizabethan writers, and we can generally tell from the sense of the verb what the object implied by it is. Cf. "revel it," where it = 'revelry,' 3 Henry VI, III. 3. 225; "fight it out," where it = 'the fight,' 1 Henry VI, I. 1. 99; "foot it," where (as here) it = 'the dance,' Tempest, I. 2. 380. Abbott notes that it is often added thus to "nouns or words that are not generally used as verbs, in order to give them the force of verbs"; cf. "duke it," Measure for Measure, III. 2. 100, "queen it," Henry VIII, II. 3. 37.

404. rehearse...by rote, repeat from memory. rote, see G.

According to Johnson, this song was not the same as the "ditty" of 402; i.e. there were two songs (both lost), the first sung by the fairies attendant on Oberon, the second by the fairies of Titania's train. Probably the MS. of the songs was kept separate from the rest of the play, and was given to the musician who had to set them to music. In this way may the loss have occurred.

410, 411. Shakespeare may allude to an ancient custom that formed part of English marriage-ceremonies, viz. the solemn blessing of the bridal-bed. The old collection of Church-ritual entitled the 'Sarum Use' contains a form of prayer and benediction for such occasions.

"A Midsummer-Night's Dream makes the impression of having been written in honour of the marriage of some great noble, in which case the bridal blessings with which it closes were doubtless intended to have more than a merely dramatic [i.e. to have a personal] significance" (Boas).

412. The only "issue" of Theseus and Hippolyta known to mythology was Hippolytus, who was far from "fortunate."

create = created. A noticeable point in Elizabethan English is the tendency to make the past participles of verbs of Latin origin conform with the Latin forms. This is the case especially with verbs of which the Latin originals belong to the 1st and 3rd conjugations. Thus Shakespeare and Milton have many participles like 'create,' 'consecrate' (422), 'incorporate' (III. 2. 208), 'dedicate,' where the termination -ate, in modern English -ated, = Lat. -atus, the passive participial termination of the 1st conjugation; cf. creatus, consecratus.

416-421. The notion of fairies presenting a child at "nativity" (=birth) with good or evil gifts and personal qualities, e.g. beauty or ugliness and the like, occurs in many fairy-tales. Thus in the romance Huon of Bordeaux, which introduced Oberon into English fairy-lore, Oberon himself is represented as having received at his birth all sorts of good qualities and possessions from the fairies; but there was a single malicious fairy present, who said that he should never be more than three feet in height, and, according to the romance, he never was.

416-419. Cf. King John, III. 1. 45-47.

"Full of unpleasing blots and sightless stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles and eye-offending marks."

418. hare-lip, a kind of cleft or fissure in the upper lip. In Lear, III. 4. 120-124, "the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet," a malicious spirit, is said to cause many disfigurements and blemishes, and among them is "the hare-lip."

419. prodigious, portentous, unnatural.

423. take his gait, take his way.

424. several; here = 'separate' in sense, as in origin (Lat. separare).

426, 427. In the original texts these lines are transposed.

430-445. An Epilogue, as we have noted (362, 363, note); it is in the same metre as the Epilogue in The Tempest.

430. shadows, spirits; cf. III. 2. 347. But there is, I think, also a hint at the sense that shadow bears in 213. Puck seems to echo what Theseus said, viz. that the stage, after all, only offers unsubstantial images. Such a reminder has an obvious appropriateness at the close of a play which is more than commonly fanciful.

435. i.e. yielding in return for our labour no more than a dream: out of so fanciful a subject only a 'dream' can be made.

dream; a pointed allusion to the play's title; see Introduction, pp. xvii, xviii.

but=than; so used after a negative with comparative; cf. I. 2. 83, "no more discretion but to hang us."

438, 442. Note "an honest Puck" and "the Puck." The use of the articles reminds us that Puck was originally a general term for any fairy, not the proper name of a particular fairy. See Introduction, p. xxix.

439, 440. i.e. if we have the luck, though we do not deserve it, to escape being hissed.

440. scape. Shakespeare and Milton use scape, short for escape, more often than escape. From O F. escaper, modern F. échapper, which meant literally 'to slip out of one's cape,' from Lat. ex, out of + cappa, a cape.

serpent's tongue; the idea of an audience hissing a piece is similarly expressed in Love's Labour's Lost, v. I. 145, 146.

441. ere long. Perhaps Shakespeare had another play ready. So at the end of 2 Henry IV he promises another piece with Falstaff in it.

444. i.e. give me your plaudits. Cf. the Epilogue to All's Well That Ends Well, "Your gentle hands lend us," i.e. clap us. The Latin comedies of Plautus and Terence end with the appeal to the audience Plaudite ('clap') or an equivalent.

"This play is so purely delicious, so little intermixed with the painful passions from which poetry distils her sterner sweets, so fragrant with hilarity, so bland and yet so bold, that I cannot imagine Shakespeare's mind to have been in any other frame than that of healthful ecstasy when the sparks of inspiration thrilled through his brain in composing it ... And all the time he must have been self-assured that his genius was 'to put a girdle round the earth'; and that souls, not yet in being, were to enjoy the revelry of his fancy" (Campbell).

GLOSSARY

THE Glossary illustrates some general principles of language which deserve careful notice.

(1) Words tend to deteriorate in meaning. Shakespeare sometimes uses in a good sense a word which in modern English has a bad sense. The converse is rare: words seldom rise in sense. Deterioration of meaning is exemplified by gossip, livery, pert, quaint: improvement of meaning by shrewd and companion, which has lost its contemptuous tone (see I. 1. 15, note). Generally a change of sense, for the better or the worse, can be explained by some external cause, such as the confusion of one word with another—cf. pert; or by something inherent in the word's original sense and its associations—cf. gossip: the process by which gossip deteriorated is easily traced.

(2) Words similar in sound and sense tend to get confused; and confusion, helped by the loss of inflections in English, often affects the form and sense of one or both words. Cf. abide=aby. Where one of the two words is constantly used, the other rarely, the more familiar is likely to absorb the other altogether. Cf. perhaps latch. A remarkable instance is allay, which as used by Elizabethans really comprised three distinct verbs, viz. allay, 'to lay down'=A.S. dlecgan; allay, 'to alleviate'=Lat. alleviare; and allay (now spelt alloy), 'to mix'=Lat. alligare. All three were combined in an inextricable tangle. "Confluence of forms" is Professor Skeat's term for this process.

(3) English has a number of what the philologist calls "doublets": that is, "words which, though apparently differing in form, are nevertheless, from an etymological point of view, one and the same, or only differ in some unimportant suffix" (Skeat). Usually the cause of this is that the same word has been introduced into English twice, through different channels. Thus a word may be taken directly from the Latin: then its English form will probably be closely similar to its Latin form. But it may also come into our language indirectly through the French: then the English form will show the modifying influence of the French and be less similar to the Latin. See vaward; see also cavalero and apricock, where we note how a form borrowed from the familiar language French gradually ousts a parallel form borrowed from a less familiar language like Spanish or Portuguese.

(4) Careless pronunciation plays a considerable part in determining the forms of words. People begin by speaking a word wrongly: the wrong form becomes familiar to them, and they end by writing it; and so it gains a footing in the language. An (= 'if'), ousel (in the form in which the original texts of the play print the word), and newt, all illustrate different aspects of careless pronunciation.

The following abbreviations should be observed:

A.S. = Anglo-Saxon, i.e. English down to about the Conquest.

Middle E. = Middle English, i.e. English from about the Conquest to about 1500.

Elizabethan E. = the English of Shakespeare and his contemporaries (down to about 1650).

O.F. = Old French, i.e. French till about 1600.

F. = modern French.

Germ. = modern German.

Gk = Greek.

Ital. = modern Italian.

Lat. = Latin.

The dates, of course, are only approximate: such divisions must be more or less arbitrary and open to criticism.

Note: In using the Glossary the student should pay very careful attention to the context in which each word occurs.

aby, III. 2. 175, 335 = Middle E. abyen or abye, 'to pay for,' from A.S. intensive prefix d + bycgan, 'to buy.' Hence figuratively to aby an offence is 'to pay for it,' i.e. redeem, expiate it. In both lines the Folios have abide, which was used = aby; cf. Julius Caesar, III. 2. 119, "some will dear abide it," i.e. suffer for it. This use of abide ('to await') was due to confusion with aby, through similarity of sound and sense (to await the consequences of a deed being akin to paying for it).

adamant, I. 1. 195; from Gk ἀδάμας, 'invincible'—ἀ-, negative prefix + δαμάειν, 'to tame.' Properly adamant meant 'a hard stone,' especially the diamond (a corruption of adamant through O.F. diamant); then also the lodestone or magnet. Cf. Batman (1584), "the stone Magnas, an Adamant...Yron [i.e. iron] is drawne to that stone" (128), and again, "the stone Adamas draweth after him yron" (133).

address'd, v. 106, 'ready'; cf. Julius Caesar, III. 1. 29, "he is address'd; press near." Literally address = 'to make straight,' from O.F. addresser, Late Lat. addructiare, from Lat. directus, 'straight.'

admirable, v. 27. Milton uses admire = Lat. admirari, 'to wonder'; cf. Paradise Lost, II. 677, 678:

"The undaunted fiend what this might be admired, Admired, not feared."

Cf. the noun in Revelation xvii. 6, "I wondered with great admiration," i.e. astonishment.

an. Note that—(1) an is a weakened form of and (d often drops off from the end of a word: cf. lawn = laund); (2) and = 'if' was a regular use till about 1600. Cf. Bacon, Essays (23), "they will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their egges"; Matthew xxiv. 48, "But and if that evil servant shall say." The 1st Folio (1623) often has and where modern texts print an; e.g. in I. 2. 86, "an 'twere."

The phrase and if or an if (III. 2. 78) really = 'if if,' since and or an by itself expresses the condition: if was added to strengthen it. How and or an came to have the meaning 'if' is doubtful. Skeat says it was because the Scandinavian ende, 'moreover,' which is cognate with and, was also used = 'if,' i.e. that the English idiom was an imitation of the Scandinavian; but this view is disputed.

Antipodes, III. 2. 55; Gk ἀντιποδες, literally 'men with feet opposite to ours,' from ἀντίπους = Gk ἀντί, 'opposite to' + πούς, 'a foot.' Hence 'those who are on the opposite side of the globe to ourselves.' Compare Richard II, III. 2. 49, "Whilst we were wandering with the Antipodes," a phrase = at the other end of the world.

antique, v. 3. Etymologically antique, 'old' = antic, 'odd,' and in Elizabethan E. the two spellings were interchanged. Hence the meaning intended by Shakespeare is not always certain. In this line the 1st Quarto has antique (retained in most texts); the 2nd Quarto and 1st Folio anticke. Seemingly the sense here is 'strange, odd'; and one is tempted to print antic. Shakespeare always accents antique (in modern E. antique) and antic.

apricock, III. 1. 169; this form (still used in the 18th century) and abrecock were the oldest, taken direct from Portuguese albricoque; the modern apricot is from F. abricot. Original word Lat. præcoqua, 'the early ripe fruit,' which passed (1) into Late Gk as πραικοκτα, (2) thence into Arabic as al būrquq (where al = 'the'), (3) thence into Portuguese.

argument, III. 2. 242, 'subject, theme'; the literal sense of Lat. argumentum. Milton at the beginning of Paradise Lost calls his subject "this great argument" (I. 24). Here the context shows that 'subject of merriment' is meant; cf. Much Ado, I. 1. 258, "thou wilt prove a notable argument," i.e. be turned into ridicule.

Ay me, I. I. 132; often in Shakespeare. Cotgrave (1611) has, "Oh; aye me; an interjection expressing sense of paine, or of smart." It is the O.F. aym, 'alas for me!'; cf. Gk οἰμοί.

bay, IV. I. 118; short for abay = O.F. abaier, from Lat. ad, 'at' + baubari, 'to yelp.' Cf. Turbervile, Art of Venerie, "when [hounds] have...brought a Deare, Bore, or such lyke to turn, head agaynst them, then we say They Baye." So to be at bay literally = 'to be at the baying or barking of the dogs'—F. être aux abois, from aboi, 'barking.' Shakespeare uses many sporting terms.

Bergomask, v. 360, 368 = Ital. bergamasco, "adj. to Bergamo, a town in the Venetian territory, capital of the old province of Bergamasco, whose inhabitants used to be ridiculed as clownish" (Stanford Dict.). Hence Bergomask (correctly, Bergamask) = 'of or belonging to either the town Bergamo or the province Bergamasco'; and a "Bergomask dance" was a rude, clownish dance such as the people of those parts practised. Examples of "Bergomask" tunes to accompany the dance exist in old Italian suites de pièces (i.e. dance-tunes of different countries strung together). It is said that Mendelssohn's setting of the "Bergomask dance" in his incidental music to this play is quite unlike the traditional dance-measure of the province as still kept up. (Shakespeare mentions the town Bergamo as Bergoma in The Taming of the Shrew, v. I. 81. Tasso and Donizetti were born there.)

beteem, I. I. 131 = be, an intensive prefix + teem, an obsolete verb = 'to think fit'—cognate with Dutch tamen, 'to be seemly,' Germ. ziemen, 'to be fit.' We find beteem in three main, closely allied, senses: (1) 'to think fit or proper'; cf. Milton, Animadversions, XIII., "although he could have well beteemed to have thanked him": (2) 'to give, grant'—as here; cf. Spenser, Faerie Queene, II. 8. 19, "So would I...Beteeme to you this sword": (3) 'to allow, permit'; cf. Hamlet, I. 2. 141.

bottle, IV. I. 37, 'a bundle of hay'; roughly, as much as a man can carry easily (not a truss of hay). Cf. Florio's Italian Dictionary (1598): "Manipolo, a handfull, a bottle of hay... a bundle." An Elizabethan book about horses and horsemanship gives a "bottle" as the right amount of hay for a horse at each feed. The word survives in the proverb "to look for a needle in a bottle of hay"; and Madden says that it is one of the words of the Tudor Age still current in parts of Ireland. A pack-horse was sometimes called a "bottle-horse," i.e. one that carried bundles, etc. O.F. botel, 'a small bundle,' from botte, 'a bundle.'

bottom; as a weavers' term it signifies (1) 'a clew on which to wind thread' (i.e. that which is the bottom or base of a ball of thread); cf. Cotgrave (1611), "Foudrillon: A bottom to wind silke, thread or yarne on." Then (2) 'the skein or ball of thread when wound'; cf. The Taming of the Shrew, IV. 3. 138, "sew me in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread."

brief, v. 42, 'list'; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2. 138, "This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels, I am possess'd of." F. bref = Lat. breve, neuter of brevus, 'short'—in Legal Lat. = 'a document, short catalogue, summary.' Rare now except in the phrase 'barrister's brief.' The same word as Germ. brief, 'a letter.'

bully, III. 1. 8, IV. 2. 19; used originally as a term of endearment among lovers, then of admiration = 'good friend,' 'fine fellow,' 'gallant'—especially in addressing a person colloquially; cf. Merry Wives, II. 3. 18, "Bless thee, bully Doctor." Perhaps from Dutch boel, 'lover'; cf. Germ. buhle, 'lover.'

carol, II. 1. 102. From O.F. carole = Ital. carola, 'a dance, song' = Low Lat. carola, 'a chain or circlet, e.g. of pearls,' also 'a dance'; carola is corrupted from Lat. corolla, 'a wreath.' Apparently the connection of sense is (1) a wreath or circlet, (2) by metaphor, a dance in a circle, (3) a song accompanying the dance, (4) any song, but especially a Christmas song. The only difficulty is the step from (1) to (2); show how the metaphor is worked in.

Cavalery, IV. 1. 25, 'gallant, man of fashion'; here used as a sort of title, as its cognate Chevalier is still used. The word was adopted from Spanish as cavallero or cavaliero. Cf. The Merry Wives of Windsor, II. 3. 77, "Cavaleiro Slender"; and 2 Henry IV, V. 3. 62, 63, "I'll drink to Master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleros about London." Bottom naturally blunders over what was still almost a foreign word. From Late Lat. caballicare, to ride a caballus ('horse'). For b softening into v cf. revel from Lat. rebellare (see night-rule, p. 131).

cheer. Properly (1) 'countenance,' as in III. 2. 96; Late Lat. cara, 'face,' = Gk kápa, 'head,' Then (2) 'spirits,' especially high spirits, because the face reflects the feelings. So 'to be of good cheer' means literally 'to be of a happy countenance,' i.e. to be in good spirits, cheerful.

churl, II. 2. 78, 'a boorish fellow'; A.S. ceorl, 'a countryman, peasant.' Hence churlish.

coil, III. 2. 339, 'confusion, trouble'; a Celtic word; cf. Irish gail, 'to rage.' "Here's such a coil!" Romeo, II. 5. 67.

craze, I. 1. 92, 'to damage, impair'; cf. Cotgrave (1611), "Accrazer: To break, burst, craze, bruise." From Swedish krasa, 'to break in pieces,' F. écraser coming from the same source. Cf. Lear, III. 4. 175, "grief hath crazed my wits." Hence crazy = 'weak-minded.' Cognates: crash, crack, creak.

cry, IV. 1. 129, 'pack of hounds'; so called from the hounds' cry or notes. Cf. Coriolanus, III. 3. 120, "You common cry of curs."

cue, III. 1. 78, v. 186; some derive from F. queue, Lat. cauda, 'a tail' (whence E. queue, a tail or twist of hair), because an actor's cue was the tail-end of the last speech. But F. queue was not used so, the F. term being réplique. Wedgwood takes cue = Q, the first letter of Lat. quando, 'when'; he says that in the MS. copy given out to an actor of the part of a play which he had to learn Q was marked at the points when it was his turn to speak. But it is not certain that this was done. The word therefore remains doubtful.

curst, III. 2. 300, 341, 439 = cursed, the p. p. of curse; through colloquial use curst lost something of its original force and in Shakespeare commonly means 'shrewish' (especially used so of women), 'ill-tempered, crabbed.' In The Taming of the Shrew the heroine is called "Katharine the curst" (I. 2. 128), "Kate the curst" (II. 187).

darkling, II. 2. 86, 'in the dark'; cf. Lear, I. 4. 237, "So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling." It is a substantival adverb, in which -ling or -long is a relic of a dative case-ending; cf. headlong, sidelong = Middle E. hedling, sideling. In Scotch the form is -lins; cf. hafflins = 'half,' e.g. in Burns, The Cotter's Saturday Night, 62, "While Jenny hafflins is afraid to speak."

device, v. 50; used here (and perhaps in I. 2. 107) of a dramatic performance; cf. Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 669. So in Jonson's Time Vindicated, "what is that the Time will flow exhibit?... what devices, what new sports?" Spenser (Faerie Queene, v. 3. 3) uses devicefull = 'full of masques, representations.'

dowager, I. 1. 5, 157, one who has a dowage; dow-age comes from F. douer, 'to endow' (Lat. dotare) + the termination -age = Lat. -aticum. Cf. voyage = viaticum, carnage = Low Lat. carnaticum.

Ethiop, III. 2. 257, literally "a native of or pertaining to Ethiopia, the name anciently given to a large and indefinite tract lying south of Egypt; hence a negro" (Stanford Dict.). Dark complexions being unpopular in Shakespeare's time (cf. "brow of Egypt," v. 11), 'Ethiop' was constantly applied to dark people, especially women, as a term of contempt. In Much Ado, v. 4. 38, Claudio would marry Hero, "were she an Ethiop," i.e. even if she were.

eyne, I. 1. 242, v. 178; an old form of the plural of eye (A.S.

edge, plur. edgan) where -ne = the plural termination which we get in oxen, brethren, children. Chaucer has eyen; cf. The Prologue, 152, "hir eyen greye as glas." Elizabethan poets use eyne (or eyn) almost entirely for the sake of rhyme; cf. Spenser, The Faerie Queene, I. 4. 21, where the rhyme swyne...eyne...fyne runs throughout. Shakespeare has eyne thirteen times—only twice unrhymed.

fairy; originally a collective noun = 'fairy folk, fairy land, enchantment'; cf. the title of The Faerie Queene. Late Lat. fata, 'a fairy,' formed from the plural of fatum, 'fate.'

favour, I. 1. 186 = 'face'—the expression of the face indicating the feeling of favour or grace. Cf. well-favoured = 'handsome, comely'; "Rachel was beautiful and well favoured," Genesis xxix. 17.

fond, II. 2. 88, 'foolish,' its old sense; cf. King Lear, iv. 7. 60, "a foolish fond old man." Originally fond was the p.p. of a Middle E. verb fonnen, 'to act like a fool.' The root is Scandinavian.

fordone, v. 381, 'tired out,' 'done up' (in colloquial E.); for- is here an intensive prefix, as often. Cf. forlorn, 'utterly lost.' The ordinary sense of fordo in Middle E. is 'to destroy.'

gleek, III. 1. 150, 'to jest, scoff'; probably akin to A.S. gelác, 'play,' gelácan, 'to trick'—from prefix ge- + lác = lark in modern E., 'game, fun.' Cf. Scotch glaiik, 'a deception, trick.'

goblin, III. 2. 399; generally a malicious elf or fairy that plays tricks, like Puck. O.F. gobelin, Low Lat. gobelinus, a diminutive of Low Lat. cobalus, 'a sprite, demon' = Gk κόβαλος, 'rogue.'

gossip, II. i. 47; originally = 'a sponsor at baptism'—from God + sib, 'related,' i.e. one related to the baptised child in respect of God. Later, as christenings were followed by social gatherings and led to talk, gossip got the notion 'a talkative person' (especially woman). An instance of the deterioration of meaning.

grain, I. 2. 97, 'dye,' strictly 'scarlet dye.' From O.F. graine, Lat. granum, the Low Lat. word = the classical Lat. coccum, which signified the scarlet dye made from the cochineal insect found on the scarlet oak in Spain and other Mediterranean countries. Cf. Cotgrave (1611), "Graine: the seed of herbs, also grain wherewith cloth is dyed, scarlet dye." So in North's Plutarch, "this sail...was not white but red, dyed in grain, and of the colour of scarlet" (Life of Theseus). Probably this cochineal insect (coccum) got to be called granum simply because it looked like a grain or seed and was thought to be one.

harbinger, III. 2. 380, 'forerunner.' Cf. Florio (1598), "Foriere, a harbinger for a camp or a prince," and Bullokar (1616), "Harbinger, one that taketh vp lodging for others," i.e. the harbinger was the officer who went on ahead to procure the night's shelter (harbourage) for his master. In Middle E. harbinger was spelt herbergeour; cf. Canterbury Tales, 5417, "herbergeours that wenten him befor." Ultimately from Icelandic herbergi, 'army-shelter'; cf. Germ. heer, 'army' + bergen, 'to shelter.'

henchman, II. 1. 121, 'page'; "Henchman, paige d'honneur, enfant d'honneur" (Palsgrave, 1530). Skeat derives from hengstman, 'horseman, groom' (A.S. hengest = 'horse'), and compares similar cognate compounds in the Scandinavian languages. The hengest might easily be softened to hench. Probably the henchmen were in the first instance young nobles who attended on the king (Henry VI had three, Edward IV six) as mounted pages, e.g. at state-ceremonies. In the Ordinances of the Royal Household they were assigned "to the riding household"; they are often mentioned in connection with tournaments; and entries in the Court Ward-Robe Accounts show that riding-equipments were part of the 'livery' served out to them: all points that confirm the derivation from hengest. In connection with the Court they are not, it seems, mentioned later than the time of Henry VIII; and gradually henchman (or hench-boy—used by Ben Jonson) came to mean any kind of page—as here. (Skeat.)

heresy, II. 2. 139; Gk αἵρεσις, 'a choice, choosing'—in the ecclesiastical sense 'a false doctrine,' from the idea 'a choosing of opinions other than those established and accepted.'

hight, v. 140, 'is called'; used by Spenser and others as (1) a present tense, (2) a preterite, (3) a participle (= 'called'). It is a late form of A.S. hätte, the preterite and participle of hatan, 'to call or be called.' Cf. Gothic haitada, 'I am called,' and Germ. ich heisse. Noticeable as the only verb in E. with a passive sense.

his; the regular neuter possessive pronoun till about 1600; cf. Genesis i. 12, "herb yielding seed after his kind," and iii. 15, "it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." At the close of the 16th century its came into use, but slowly. Spenser never has its; the Bible of 1611 never; Bacon rarely; Milton only three times in his poetry (Nativity Ode, 106, Par. Lost, I. 254, IV. 813), and very rarely in his prose; and Shakespeare is doubtful. In no extant text of any of his works printed prior to his death does its occur: hence the nine instances in the 1st Folio (five in a single play, Winter's Tale) have been suspected as tamperings with the original. For his use of the old idiom cf. Julius Caesar, I. 2. 123, 124, "that same eye...did lose his lustre."

injurious, III. 2. 195, 'insulting,' like F. injurieux; cf. Pope, Iliad, II. 274, "Thus with injurious taunts attacked the throne." So injury = 'abusive speech, calumny' in 3 Henry VI, IV. 1. 107; cf. Bacon, "He fell to bitter invectives...and spake all the injuries he could devise of Charles."

interlude, I. 2. 6, V. 156 = 'a play performed in the intervals of a festival'; from Lat. inter, 'between' + ludere, 'to play.' Also used of any slight dramatic piece of a comic nature.

knacks, I. 1. 34, 'pretty trifles, knick-knacks'; commonly used of dress, ornaments for the person. Cf. a song in Bullen's Lyrics (p. 129), "Some [ladies] do long for pretty knacks, And some for strange devices." A Celtic word—Welsh cnec—meaning first, 'a snap,' as with the fingers; then 'a trick,' and so 'a toy, trifle.'

latch, III. 2. 36, 'moisten'; it is the causal form of leak and means 'to drip or cause to drop.' Cf. Swedish laka, 'to distil, to fall by drops'; Icelandic leka, 'to drip, to leak'; provincial English lecks, 'droppings,' leck on, 'to pour on,' and latch-pan, 'a dripping-pan' (which has nothing to do with latch, 'to catch'). The nearest A.S. word is leccan, 'to moisten, wet': thence a verb letch, 'to wet,' might have been formed: possibly this verb did exist and simply got merged in the commoner verb latch, 'to catch.' At any rate, the important point is that latch here means 'to moisten,' and etymologically is connected with leak—not with latch, 'to catch,' from A.S. læccan 'to seize,' nor with F. lécher, 'to lick.' (Skeat.)

leviathan, II. 1. 174; then commonly identified with the whale, though Heb. lîvyâthân merely = 'huge monster.' Thus in Job xli. and Psalms lxxiv. 14 ("Thou brakest the heads of leviathan in pieces") leviathan = 'crocodile.'

livery, I. 1. 70; in Elizabethan E. = 'any kind of dress, garb'; cf. Milton, L'Allegro, 62, "The clouds in thousand liveries dight." Originally livery meant whatever was given (i.e. délivré) by a lord to his household, whether food, money or garments (cf. F. habits de livrée = 'clothes served out yearly to domestics'). From F. livrer = Low Lat. liberare, 'to abandon.'

lob, II. 1. 16, 'clown'; cf. Minsheu (1617), "A lobbe, lubber or clown." Etymologically lob = lubbar (or lubber); cf. "lubbar fiend" in L'Allegro, 110, where Robin Goodfellow (i.e. Puck) is meant. A Celtic word; cf. Welsh lob, a dolt.

lullaby, II. 2. 14, 15; from Swedish lulla, 'to lull'; cf. Dutch lullen, 'to sing in a lulling, humming voice.' All these words are onomatopœtic (see pat, later), being formed from lu lu hummed by nurses in lulling children to sleep.

luscious, II. I. 251, 'pleasant to the sense'—commonly of taste (= 'delicious'), but also of smell (= 'fragrant, sweet'), and even of hearing. Probably compounded of lusty, 'pleasant' (from lust, 'pleasure') + the termination -ous.

masque, v. 32, 'an entertainment in which the performers wore masks or vizards.' From F. masque; but ultimately from Arabic maskharat, 'a buffoon, jester, a pleasantry,' which passed into Spanish, thence into French, thence into English. Compare masquerade. Also spelt mask.

mew, I. I. 71; a term in falconry, from O.F. mue = (1) 'a moulting,' from Lat. mutare, 'to change' (i.e. the hawk's feathers), (2) 'the cage where the hawk was kept during the time of mewing or moulting' (also from mutare). "The plural meus now means a range of stabling, because the royal stables were rebuilt (A.D. 1534) in a place where the royal falcons had been kept" (Skeat). How popular falconry was at that time is shown by the number of terms peculiar to the sport which Shakespeare and other Elizabethans use.

mimic, III. 2. 19, 'actor'; the 1st Quarto has Minnick, the 2nd Minnock. The word was misprinted (perhaps because uncommon) as mimir in the 1st edition of Milton's Samson Agonistes, 1325 ("antics, mummers, mimics"), which led Johnson to admit mimir into his Dictionary. Gk μιμικός, 'imitative,' from μῖμος, 'an actor.'

minimus, III. 2. 329, 'a being of the smallest size,' Lat. minimus; cf. mimm, e.g. in Paradise Lost, VII. 482, "minims of nature" = 'tiny creatures.'

misprise; misprision; III. 2. 74, 90; O.F. mesprendre, 'to mistake,' mesprision, 'error, mistake'—from Lat. prehendere = prehendere. Cf. Much Ado About Nothing, IV. I. 187, "There is some strange misprision in the princes," i.e. they have been "misled" (189) about Hero. Note that misprise = 'to despise,' misprision = 'scorn,' are quite distinct, coming from F. mépriser (Low Lat. pretiare).

momentary, I. I. 143; from Lat. momentaneus, just as momentary (now used) is from momentarius. Cf. Cowley (who died 1667), "no less affrighted with their lasting ignominy, than enticed by their momentary glories" (Essays, Pitt Press ed. p. 31); the form was common then.

morris, II. I. 98; usually = 'morris-dance,' i.e. the Moorish dance; from Spanish morisco. The Span. morisco (Anglicised in Elizabethan E.: cf. 2 Henry VI, III. I. 365, "caper...like a wild Morisco") was from Late Lat. moriscus, 'Moorish,' in classical Lat. Maurus, Gk Μαῦρος (i.e. 'the dark people').

morrow, IV. 1. 144, 'morning.' These two words and morn are cognates, all coming from the Middle E. morwen, which was softened from A.S. morgen.

murrion, II. 1. 97; commonly spelt murraïn, and used as noun, not as adjective. Low Lat. morina, 'a pestilence among animals'; from Lat. mori, 'to die.'

naught, IV. 2. 14. Commonly the form nought was used = 'nothing,' and naught = 'something bad.' In Elizabethan E. the adj. naught or naughty had the strong sense 'bad, good for naught.' Cf. Henry V, I. 2. 73, "his title was corrupt and naught." So in Proverbs vi. 12, "a naughty person, a wicked man." From ne, the old negative + aught.

needs, I. 2. 90, III. 2. 119, 'of necessity.' The genitive case of need and a survival of the old adverbial use of the genitive, as in willes, 'willingly,' sothes, 'truly.' Commonly used with must.

newt, II. 2. 11 = an ewt; for the opposite process, due to careless pronunciation, cf. adder (an adder = a nadder), apron (an apron = a napron). Ewt is contracted from Middle E. evete, 'lizard.'

night-rule, III. 2. 5; commonly explained 'order of the night,' like the colloquialism 'what's the order of the day?' i.e. what are we going to do? Perhaps however the sense is 'night-revel.' From the similarity of their older forms rule (Lat. regula) and revel (from rebellare) seem to have been confused, and rule sometimes to have the sense 'revel.' Cf. "this uncivil rule" in Twelfth Night, II. 3. 132 (referring to Sir Toby's revelling). The Century Dictionary also cites Drayton's Polyolbion, xxvii. 251:

"So blythe and bonny now the lads and lasses are,
was never seen such rule,

In any place but here, at bonfire, or at yule."

orange-tawny, I. 2. 96, III. 1. 129, 'of a deep yellow'; cf. Bacon, "Users should have Orange-tawney Bonnets" (Of Usurie), and Ben Jonson, "The colours of the masquers were varied; the one half in orange-tawny and silver" (Masque of Beauty). tawny, put for tanny, F. fanné, tanned.

orient, IV. 1. 59, 'bright, lustrous'; in Elizabethan poetry a constant epithet of gems, especially pearls. Shakespeare uses it in five places, and in four of these it qualifies 'pearl'; cf. Richard III, IV. 4. 322, Antony and Cleopatra, I. 5. 41. So in Milton; cf. Par. Lost, IV. 238, "orient pearl and sands of gold," and V. 2. Perhaps, used thus, it first meant 'eastern,' gems coming from the Orient or East; then, as these were bright, orient got the general sense 'bright.'

ousel, III. 1. 128; A.S. ósle, Germ. amsel. Spelt woosel in the Quartos and Folios; so again in the Quartos in 2 Henry IV, III. 2. 9 ("a black ousel"); and probably woosel was a popular or provincial form, the w being one of those parasitic sounds which, due in the first instance to a word being carelessly spoken, remain when it is written. Conversely ooze, soft mud, was originally woose. In Shakespeare's time ousel was evidently the common word for the ordinary blackbird, and in some (e.g. Yorkshire) dialects it is, I believe, still so used. But in general usage ousel is now limited to Ring-Ousel (a large species of blackbird, with dark bill and a white ring or crescent on its breast, that haunts moorlands), and Water-Ousel or 'Dipper' (a quite distinct species of bird).

owe, II. 2. 79. Originally = 'to possess,' as here; then 'to possess another's property,' whence 'to be in debt for.' Cf. Macbeth, I. 4. 10, "To throw away the dearest thing he owed." Akin to own.

pageant, III. 2. 114, 'an exhibition, spectacle'; originally = the moveable scaffold on which the old 'mystery-plays' and shows were acted.' Lat. pagina, 'a page,' also 'a plank of wood,' and later 'a scaffold of planks' fastened together; cf. Lat. pangere, 'to fasten' (Skeat).

passion; then used of any strong emotion or the expression thereof—as anger (III. 2. 74), sorrow (V. 293, 321), sense of humour (V. 70). Lat. passio, 'suffering,' from pati, 'to suffer.'

pat, III. 1. 2, V. 188, 'fitly, exactly, just at the right moment'; from the verb pat, 'to strike.' It represents, says Wedgwood, "the sound of something thrown down upon the ground, as marking the exact moment of a thing being done"—just as "smack represents the sound of a blow, or of a sudden fall, in such expressions as knocking a thing smack down, cutting it smack off." Such words illustrate the principle of onomatopœia, i.e. the formation of a word that imitates or suggests in its sound the thing or action signified.

patch, III. 2. 9, 'paltry fellow, clown'; cf. Tempest, III. 2. 71, "What a pied ninny's this! Thou scurvy patch!" The professional jester or fool was called a patch from his parti-coloured or patch-like dress (cf. IV. 1. 215, "man is but a patched fool"); Wolsey had two jesters so named.

pelting, II. 1. 91; akin to paltry, and connected with Swedish paltor, 'rags'—hence 'rubbish, refuse.' In Shakespeare pelting = 'contemptible, paltry'; cf. Lear, II. 3. 18, "poor pelting villages," and Measure for Measure, II. 2. 112, "every pelting petty officer." We find in Elizabethan writers pelter, 'a mean person,' peltry, 'trash,' peltingly, 'in a contemptible manner.'

GLOSSARY

pensioner, II. I. 10, 'personal attendant'; familiar in this sense to Shakespeare's audience, since Henry VIII and Elizabeth had a bodyguard of young nobles termed 'Pensioners'—similar to the 'Queen's Gentlemen-at-arms' now. Cf. Florio, Worlde of Wordes (1598), "Mazzière, a macebearer, a verger, a sergeant of the mace. Also a halberdier or poleaxe man, such as the Queene of Englands gentlemen pencioners are." So in Merry Wives, II. 2. 79, "earls, nay, which is more, pensioners." They had very rich uniforms adorned with gold-lace and jewels; hence probably the allusion in II. I. 11 ("In their gold coats"). Called Pensioners from their pension, i.e. stipend; Lat. pensio, 'a payment.'

pert, I. I. 13; in a good sense = 'lively,' 'alert'; cf. Milton, Comus, 118, "the pert faeries and dapper elves." Really for perk = 'smart' in Middle E.; but confused in form and sense with malapert from Lat. male + expertus, 'too experienced,' hence 'too sharp, saucy.'

plain-song, III. I. 134 = a melody in its simplest form without variations or descant (such as Milton attributes to the elaborate song of the nightingale, Par. Lost, iv. 603). Cf. Jeremy Taylor, "after the angel had told his message in plain song, the whole chorus joined in descant." The phrase was a traditional description of the cuckoo's simple, monotonous note; cf. Skelton, Phyllip Sparrowe,

"To kepe just playne songe,

Our chanteris shall be your cuckoue."

quaint, II. I. 99, II. 2. 7; O.F. coint from Lat. cognitus, 'well-known'—cf. acquaint = Lat. ad cognitare. Used originally = 'knowing,' 'prudent.' Cf. Hampole's Psalter, Ps. cxix. 98, "Abouen myn enmys quaynt thou me made," where the A.V. has wisser: in the same work quayntis = prudencia, 'cunning'—e.g. "quayntis of the deuel" (Bramley's ed. pp. 9, 425). But later, F. coint, being wrongly supposed to come from Lat. comptus, 'adorned,' got the sense 'trim.' This influenced E. quaint, which also got the sense 'trim,' and so "compt, neat, fine" (Cotgrave), 'pretty.' Shakespeare always uses quaint thus; cf. "my quaint Ariel," The Tempest, I. 2. 317; "a gown more quaint, more pleasing," The Taming of the Shrew, iv. 3. 102. Now quaint = 'odd,' 'eccentric'; so that its original meaning has quite passed away.

quern, II. I. 36, 'a handmill for grinding corn,' made of two corresponding stones. Chaucer says of Samson in captivity, "they made him at the querne grynede," Monkes Tale, 84. A.S. cweorn, from a root 'to grind.'

quill, III. I. 131, 'pipe'; often so used, especially = 'shepherd's pipe': cf. Spenser, Shepheards Calender, June, "homely shepheards quill," and Lycidas, 188. To "tune the quill" was a common phrase; cf. the MS. poem ascribed to Milton, "The sacred sisters tune their quills." Here the reference is to the shrill notes of the wren. Apparently quill is from O.F. quille, 'a ninepin' = Germ. kegel, the connecting link being the notion of slender, tapering shape.

rehearse, I. 2. 105, III. 1. 75, 'to recite a piece previously to public exhibition,' i.e. by way of preparation. In v. 404 = 'to repeat, say.' From O.F. rehercer, 'to harrow over again' = (by metaphor) 'to go over the same ground,' i.e. repeat. Cf. modern F. herse, 'a harrow'; Lat. herpex.

rere- (or rear-)mice, II. 2. 4. A S. hréremús = 'a bat,' so called from the flapping of its wings; from A.S. hréran, 'to agitate' + mús, 'a mouse.' Cf. the provincial word 'flutter-mouse,' 'a bat,' i.e. a fluttering mouse.

rote, v. 404; always in this phrase by rote = 'by heart,' literally 'in a beaten track or route'; cf. routine. From O.F. rote, modern F. route, 'way' = Lat. rupta (i.e. rupta via), 'a way broken through obstacles' (Lat. rumpere, to 'break').

round, II. 1. 140; roundel, II. 2. 1; 'a dance in a circle' (as we say, 'a round dance'), in which all joined hands. Cf. Comus, 143, 144, "Come, knit hands, and beat the ground, In a light fantastic round." Commonly roundel, like F. rondeau, = 'a kind of ballad or poem containing a line which recurs or comes round again.'

russet, III. 2. 21; commonly = 'red, reddish,' from O.F. rousset, a diminutive of roux, 'reddish,' Lat. russus. But that russet could then be used = 'grey, ash-coloured' is certain; cf. Batman, speaking of paints, "Blacke and white [mixed] maketh a russet" (1582 ed. p. 395); and Cotgrave (1611), "Gris: gray, light-russet, ash-coloured."

sad, IV. 1. 100, 'grave, serious'; a common meaning then. Cf. Henry V, IV. 1. 318, "the sad and solemn priests"; and Milton, Par. Lost, VI. 541, "in his face I see sad resolution." The original sense was 'sated,' A.S. sæd being akin to Lat. satis, 'enough.'

shrewd; in II. 1. 33 = 'mischievous'; in III. 2. 323 = 'shrewish.' Middle E. schrewed, the p.p. of schrewe, 'to curse'; hence in a general sense = 'bad,' the context showing what particular kind of badness is meant. Cf. "shrewd news" = bad news, John, V. 5. 14; "a shrewd turn" = a bad turn, All's Well, III. 5. 71. The good sense 'clever,' 'sharp' that shrewd now bears is rare in Shakespeare.

sort, III. 2. 13; used several times by Shakespeare con-temptuously = 'set, company'; cf. Richard II, IV. 246, "a sort of traitors," Richard III, v. 3. 316, "a sort of vagabonds." More commonly = 'kind species'; cf. III 2. 159, 388. F. sorte, Lat. sors, 'a lot.'

GLOSSARY

thorough, II. 1. 3, 5; a later form of through (cf. Germ. durch). Then not uncommon; cf. Marlowe, Faustus (1604), III. 106, "And make a bridge thorough the moving air." Used by modern writers sometimes for the sake of the metre; cf. Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, 64, "Thorough the fog it came," and Tennyson, "Thoro the black-stemm'd pines only the far river shines" (Juvenilia). From this later form we have thorough, the adj. = 'complete,' and thoroughly.

thrum, v. 291. The original notion was 'end,' 'edge'; cf. Icelandic thróm, 'edge'; cognates Gk τέρμα, 'end,' Lat. terminus. Hence in weaving = the edge of the warp, i.e. the tufted ends of the threads.

triumph, I. 1. 19; Lat. triumphus = Gk θρίαμβος, 'a hymn to Bacchus'; in Elizabethan E. used of any great festivity or public show. Cf. Bacon's Essay Of Masques and Triumphs. So often in Milton; cf. L'Allegro, 119, 120,

"Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
In weeds of peace, high triumphs hold."

troth, II. 2. 36 = truth, of which it is only another form. Cf. the verb throw, literally 'to believe to be true' (A.S. tréowe). Cf. Coriolanus, IV. 5. 198, "He was too hard for him directly, to say the troth on't"; and Cymbeline, v. 5. 274, "Now fear is from me, I'll speak troth" vaward, IV. 1. 110, 'forepart'; another spelling of vanward = O.F. avantgarde, 'foreguard.' For a similar abbreviation of F. avant, 'before,' cf. vaunt-courier = F. avant-coureur, 'fore-runner,' in King Lear, III. 2. 5.

virtuous, III. 2. 367, full of virtue = 'power, efficacy' (III. 1. 143); applied especially—as here—to the medicinal properties of herbs. Cf. Milton, Comus, 621, "In every virtuous plant and healing herb."

vixen, III. 2. 324. Middle E. vixen or fixen, 'a she-fox'; "answering to A.S. fyx-en, made from fox by vowel-change of o to y, with fem. suffix -en; precisely as A.S. gyden, a goddess, from god, a god" (Skeat). (1) Note v = f: "the Southern [dialect] was fond, as it still is, of using v where the other dialects had f" (Morris); e.g. 'vallow' = 'fallow' in Devonshire. (2) In Old English -en was a common feminine suffix.

waste, 'to spend,' II. 1. 57; cf. The Merchant of Venice, III. 4. 12, (friends) "That do converse and waste the time together."

waxen, II. 1. 56. Here -en is the old plural termination used in the Midland dialects of English, corresponding with the Northern -es and the Southern -eth. It began to get obsolete in literary English about the end of the 15th cent. (though in the speech of the people it lasted much longer—indeed, in certain provincial dialects is still preserved). Spenser, a lover of archaic forms, has it often; Shakespeare very rarely. An instance of the late survival of the form is been or ben = 'are'; cf. Pericles, II. prologue 28, "Where when men been." (Some now take waxen as simply a poetical form of the verb wax.)

weed, II. 1. 256, II. 2. 71, 'dress'; A.S. wæd, 'garment.' Often used so by Elizabethans; cf. "weeds of peace," Troilus and Cressida, III. 3. 239 (and also in Milton's L'Allegro, 120—see triumph). Now limited to the phrase 'widow's weeds,' except in poetry.

welkin, III. 2. 356, 'sky'; properly a plural word = 'clouds'; cf. the Middle E. form welken = A.S. wolcnu, 'clouds,' plural of wolcen, 'a cloud.' Cognate Germ. wolke. For the plural termination -en (welk-en) see eyne.

wood, II. 1. 192, 'frantic'; cf. Venus and Adonis, 740, "frenzies wood," and Faerie Queene, II. 4. 11, "the tempest of his passion wood." In Faerie Queene, III. 11. 27, woodness = 'madness.' A.S. wōd. Cognates: Germ. wuth, 'rage,' and Wōden, or Odin, 'the furious god' (whence our Wednesday = A.S. wōdnesdæg, 'Woden's day').

wot, III. 2. 422, IV. 1. 169; present tense, 1st pers. sing., of the 'anomalous' verb wit, 'to know,' Middle E. witen, A.S. witan. The Bible (1611) preserves the past tense wist, e.g. in Mark ix. 6, "he wist not what to say; for they werē sore afraid." Akin to Germ. wissen, 'to know'; also to Lat. videre, 'to see,' and Gk ἰδέναι.

APPENDIX

MILTON AND A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

"Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child, Warble his native wood-notes wild,"

L'Allegro, 133, 134.

I cannot help thinking that A Midsummer-Night's Dream was one of the plays which Milton had in mind when he wrote those lines. Certainly there is no play of Shakespeare to which they seem more applicable, and none, I should say, to which Milton's works contain more frequent resemblances. These I thought that it would be interesting to bring together. Of the passages, however, quoted here, some are meant to be regarded merely as illustrations, not reminiscences, of the play. The italics in the extracts are mine.

I. I. 76-78:

Cf. Comus, 737-744, the passage on Virginity, in which the metaphor of the rose is introduced with much the same effect.

I. I. 134-140:

Cf. Par. Lost, x. 895-908, the lines on the evils incident to the lover's state and to wedlock.

I. I. 185: cf. Lycidas, 48, "when first the white-thorn blows."

I. I. 207, II. I. 243:

Cf. Par. Lost, I. I. 254, 255:

"The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven."

(Hartley Coleridge has the line, "One sinful wish would make a hell of heaven.")

II. I. 25:

Cf. Comus, 423, "May trace huge forests, and unharboured heaths"; also the fourth draft of Par. Lost in the Cambridge MSS.: "The angel Gabriel...tracing Paradise...passes by the station of y<sup>e</sup> Chorus." (The verb trace is used by Ben Jonson also in this uncommon sense 'to wander through'; cf. The Satyr:

"Only we are free to trace
All his grounds, as he to chase.")

II. I. 29:

Cf. Comus, 1003, "far above, in spangled sheen." (In the same speech, l. 1021, occurs the rare epithet sphery—"Higher than the sphery chime"—used only there by Milton and only in II. 2. 99 of this play by Shakespeare.)

138 A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

II. I. 34-38:

Cf. L'Allegro, 105-114, the description of "the drudging goblin" = Robin Goodfellow.

II. I. 39:

Cf. Par. Lost, IX. 634-640:
 "As when a wandering fire,

Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends,
 Hovering and blazing with delusive light,
 Misleads the amazed night-wanderer from his way."

II. I. 55:

Cf. L'Allegro, 32, "And Laughter holding both his sides."

II. I. 69:

Cf. Comus, 139, "The nice Morn, on the Indian steep."
 (I hardly think that this line should be held to support the reading steep, not steppe, in the play. Very likely, Milton read Midsummer-N. D. in the 1st Folio Version, 1623, and had not seen the 1st Quarto, in which alone steppe occurs. Personally, I believe steppe to be wrong; see the note on II. I. 69.)

II. I. 29, 84, 141:

Cf. Par. Lost, I. 781-783:
 "faery elves,
 Whose midnight revels, by a forest-side
 Or fountain, some belated peasant sees."

II. I. 126:

Cf. Comus, 117, 118:
 "And on the tawny sands and shelves
 Trip the pert faeries and the dapper elves.
 For tawny the Cambridge ms. has yellow."

II. I. 108, 129:

Cf. Lycidas, 136-138:
 "Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
 Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
 On whose fresh lap the swart-star sparsely looks."

II. I. 217-219:

Cf. Comus, 393-403.

II. I. 249-251:

Cf. Comus, 543-545:
 "I sat me down to watch upon a bank
 With ivy canopied, and interwove
 With flaunting honeysuckle" (= Shakespeare's woodbine).

APPENDIX

II. 1. 255:

Cf. Par. Lost, IX. 524, 525:

"Oft he bowed

His turret crest, and sleek enamelled neck"; said of Satan as he appears to Eve in the form of a serpent.

III. 2. 61:

Cf. Nativity Ode, 75, "in their glimmering orbs did glow"
(said of the stars). There, as here, glimmer denotes waning light; and orb = 'sphere.'

III. 2. 379:

Cf. Il Penseroso, 59, "While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke" (=team).

III. 2. 380:

Cf. Song on May Morning, "the bright morning-star, day's harbinger."

III. 2. 381, 382:

Cf. Nativity Ode, 232-234:

"The flocking shadows pale

Troop to the infernal jail;

Each fettered ghost slips to his several grave," i.e. at the approach of morn. We may note shadow = spirit;

cf. III. 2. 347, V. 430.

III. 2. 384:

Cf. On the Death of a Fair Infant, 29, 31:

"Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,

Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed."

III. 2. 387:

Cf. Il Penseroso, 58, "Smoothing the rugged brow of Night."

III. 2. 389:

Cf. Il Penseroso, 122-124:

"Till civil-suited Morn appear,

Not tricked and frowned, as she was wont

With the Attic boy to hunt";

i.e. Cephalus, "the Morning's love."

III. 2. 391:

Cf. L'Allegro, 59, 60:

"Right against the eastern gate,

Where the great sun begins his state."

(Other poets borrowed the phrase. Cf. Browne, Britannia's
Pastorals, I. 5:

"the Morne doth looke

Out of the Easterne Gates":

and again in the Pastorals, II. 5.)

IV. I. 102:

Cf. Comus 1013 et seq., the Epilogue spoken by "the Spirit."

IV. I. 103:

Cf. Il Penseroso, 67, "To behold the wandering moon."

V. 37:

Cf. Par. Lost, II. 90-92:

"The vassals of his angel, when the scourge
Inexorably, and the torturing hour,
Calls us to penance."

(The phrase has also been adopted by Gray, Hymn to Adversity. For another echo of this play in Gray, cf. the Elegy, 114, "Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne.")

V. 398-421:

Cf. the Vacation Exercise, 59-64, for the notion of the fairies coming to dance "upon the hearth"—apparently a sign of favour—and blessing children "in nativity":

"Good luck befriend thee, son; for, at thy birth,
The faery ladies danced upon the hearth;
Thy drowsy nurse hath sworn she did them spie
Come tripping to the room where thou didst lie;
And, sweetly singing round about thy bed,
Strow all their blessings on thy sleeping head."

II

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM, II. I. 148-168

That there is an allusion in this passage to Queen Elizabeth is practically certain. Such complimentary references to her maidenhood and "imperial" majesty (cf. 163 and Henry V, Chorus v. 30) occur frequently in the poetry of that time. We may safely identify her with the "fair vestal." Further, some editors believe that there is an allusion to the famous visit she paid to the Earl of Leicester at Kenilworth Castle in July 1575. Lines 148-154 are supposed to refer to the festivities, and lines 155-168 to certain love-intrigues, connected with this visit.

As to lines 148-154: of the festivities with which the Queen was entertained we have a full account (amongst others) in a letter to a friend written by a London merchant, Robert Laneham, who stayed at Kenilworth during the time of the Queen's visit. One of the entertainments (he tells us) was a kind of Masque or water-fête given on the great lake in the park. In this Masque various mythological characters appeared on the water. Among them were Triton, who was borne by "a swimming mermaid" and bade the waters be still, and Arion, "riding aloft upon his old friend the Dolphin". and singing "a delectable ditty of a song<sup>1</sup>." On another evening there was a display of fireworks by the lake—"stars coruscant" Laneham calls them, that shot over the waters. It has been thought that these incidents suggested to Shakespeare the description in lines 148-154, and that the description is really a personal reminiscence—that Shakespeare himself witnessed these festivities at Kenilworth. His native place is only 13 miles distant. In 1575 he was 11 years old. Edward Arden, the head of his mother's family, is supposed to have been at the castle at the time. It seems to me likely that Shakespeare was taken from Stratford to Kenilworth—still more that in this passage he is speaking of the entertainments, whether from memory or report<sup>2</sup>.

As to lines 155-168: the view has been put forward that the picture of Cupid taking "a certain aim" is an allegory symbolising the ambitious design of Leicester to win the hand of the Queen in marriage; while the "little western<sup>3</sup> flower" has been variously identified with (1) Lettice<sup>4</sup>, Countess of Essex, who was involved in an intrigue with Leicester, (2) Amy Robsart. But these identifications are mere conjecture. There is no need to think that Shakespeare intended any personal allusion other than that to Elizabeth herself.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM, IV. 1. 47-49

There is no satisfactory explanation of this passage. According to the natural way of taking it, woodbine is the subject and honeysuckle the object of entwist; different plants are intended; and the sentence corresponds in form with the next. Now 'wood-

<sup>1</sup> It was on this occasion that the incident mentioned in the note on III. 1. 36-47 occurred. Scott introduces it in Kenilworth, chap. 30.

<sup>2</sup> No student accepts, therefore I do not think it necessary to give at length, Warburton's interpretation, of which the main points were that (1) the "mermaid" = Mary, Queen of Scots, so called because of her island-realm, her beauty and her unchastity; (2) the "dolphin" = her husband, the Dauphin of France; (3) the "rude sea" = her sea-girt kingdom Scotland, which, turbulent under the Regency, became more peaceful on the Queen's return from France in 1561; (4) the "stars" = the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, who fell in her plots against Elizabeth, and the Duke of Norfolk whom she was to marry.

<sup>3</sup> i.e. English; cf. "throned by the west," l. 158.

<sup>4</sup> On her husband's death Leicester married her.

bine,' though commonly used = honeysuckle, was also variously used by Elizabethans = (1) bindweed or convolvulus, (2) ivy. If we had only the present passage to consider, I should without demur take 'woodbine' = convolvulus here. Compare Ben Jonson's picture (in his Masque The Vision of Delight, 1617) of the bindweed or convolvulus growing up round and intertwining itself with the more robust plant, the honeysuckle:

"behold!

How the blue bindweed doth itself infold
With honeysuckle."

The two other passages, however, in which Shakespeare uses 'woodbine' have to be noticed, viz. II. 1. 251 of this play and Much Ado, III. 1. 30. Comparison of the two passages shows that 'woodbine' means the same plant in both; and that this plant is the honeysuckle is clear from the instance in Much Ado, because "the woodbine coverture" (l. 30) or arbour in which Beatrice hides has just before (ll. 8, 9) been described as an arbour "where honeysuckles...Forbid the sun to enter." The fact therefore that in the only two other places in Shakespeare where 'woodbine' occurs it means honeysuckle, is certainly a very strong objection against its meaning convolvulus here. To some editors the objections seem conclusive, and the explanations have been offered:

(1) That 'woodbine' signifies the whole plant of the honeysuckle, and 'honeysuckle' only the actual blossoms; but this notion does not suit 'entwist':

(2) That 'honeysuckle' is in apposition to 'woodbine'—the correct punctuation being "So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle, etc."—and that 'entwist' either (a) is intransitive = 'twists itself,' or (b) governs 'fingers.' But surely only the ivy is connected with the elm.

It will be noticed that according to both (1) and (2) only one plant—the woodbine or honeysuckle—is introduced, whereas the whole drift of the passage implies, I think, that two plants are intended. It seems to me, on the whole, that the objections to (1) and (2) are really greater than the objection to taking 'woodbine' in the sense 'convolvulus.' 'Convolvulus' therefore is the meaning given in the Notes.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM, IV. 1. 78

Though the explanation of "Dian's bud" given in the note on this passage appears to me the most probable, there is another view worth mentioning, viz. that the "herb" with which Oberon touched Titania's eyes was a rose, and that Shakespeare chose the rose as a symbol. Some probability is lent to this view by a passage in Greene's Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (1592). He makes Friar Bacon prophesy that there will one day flourish in England a flower which shall far surpass all others; and this flower, "So rich and fair a bud," he calls "Diana's rose" (scene xvi. 47, 62). Now, the passage is allegorical: "Diana's rose" is "the rose of England's Virgin Queen," "Diana" or "Cynthia" being the title constantly applied by poets of the time to Queen Elizabeth, in allusion to her maidenhood. It is possible that Shakespeare used "Diana's bud" exactly in the same sense that Greene used "Diana's rose," i.e. with a complimentary reference to Elizabeth; and that these lines—indeed, the whole notion of this healing herb—are an allegorical way of saying that the maidenhood of the Queen is superior to the power of Cupid. We must remember that such flattering allusions, strange and far-fetched as they may seem to us, were very common then, and, being common, were readily understood by Elizabethan audiences. It is easy to see how, if A Midsummer-Night's Dream was acted before the Queen, a clever actor can have made her and the spectators understand who the "Dian" of the poet's fancy was.

APPENDIX

As regards Shakespeare's own relations with the Queen, Mr Boas says:

"How far Shakspeare came into personal relations with Elizabeth herself it is impossible to tell. Ben Jonson speaks of her as being 'taken'<sup>1</sup> by his flights, and Chettle declares that she 'Graced his desert,

And to his lays opened her royal heart.'

It is certain that many of his dramas were performed at Court, and there is an early tradition that The Merry Wives of Windsor was written at the express desire of Elizabeth, who wished to see Falstaff in love. But there is no evidence, except a statement of Rowe, that the Queen showed Shakspeare any exceptional favour, and the references to her in his works are, as is well known, surprisingly few. In the last chorus to Henry V she is styled 'our gracious empress,' and she is without doubt 'the fair vestal throned by the West' of Oberon's vision in A Midsummer-Night's Dream. But the profuse compliments of Greene and Peele are lacking, and it is noticeable that Chettle complains that on the Queen's death 'the silver-tongued Melicert,' as he calls Shakspeare, did not 'drop from his honied muse one sable tear'."—Shakspeare and his Predecessors, pp. 121, 122.

<sup>1</sup> i.e. charmed by his poetic flights.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

III

SOME POINTS OF THE PLAY'S FAIRY LORE ILLUSTRATED

II. I. 40, 41:

"Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they shall have good luck."

There is, I suppose, an allusion here to the old belief that if you wished a fairy or spirit to be friendly you should speak to (or of) him in a complimentary way. Thus the Irish called the fairies "good<sup>1</sup> people"—the Scotch "good neighbours." The elves of German and Scandinavian mythology were propitiated by flattering names. Similarly the Greeks called the Furies by the euphemistic title "Eumenides" ("the gracious powers").

IV. 2. 4: I have no doubt that the disputed word "transported" means "carried off by the fairies," and that it was almost a technical term in this connection. In one of the best known works on supernatural powers and witchcraft published during the 16th century—Bodin's<sup>2</sup> De la Demonomanie des Sorciers (1580)—there is a long discussion (bk II. chap. 4) of the question whether men can be "transporté" from one place to another ("d'un lieu en l'autre") by the agency of spirits. Reginald Scot has a chapter (bk v. chap. 7) in his Discoverie (1584) "concerning transportations." And in the Discourse of Spirits appended to the 3rd edition (1665) of Scot's work occurs the following in a section that deals with fairies: "many [i.e. men] have been taken away by the sayd Spirits, for a fortnight or a month together, being carryed with them in Chariots through the Air, over Hills and Dales...till at last they have been found lying in some meadow or Mountain, bereaved of their senses."

That I believe, was the sort of "transportation" that Starveling supposed to have happened to Bottom.

His transformation by Puck may be illustrated similarly from current superstition. Mr Thoms says, "there can be little question that the possibility of such transformations<sup>3</sup> was in his

<sup>1</sup> Cf. the title "Robin Goodfellow."

<sup>2</sup> Bodin (1530-1596) believed in witchcraft.

<sup>3</sup> Bodin (bk II. chap. 6) mentions several instances of transformations; and in one case, says Scot ironically, the man transformed "did eate provender and haie!...Bodin's ass-headed man must either eate haie, or nothing" (pp. 76, 79). Now every reader of A Midsummer-Night's Dream will recall Bottom's request for "a peck of provender" and "a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow."

[Shakespeare's] day an article of popular belief." He quotes from Scot's Discoverie the recipe of the drug by which magicians claimed to be able to fix an ass's head on a man. The great magician Dr Faustus is said in the narrative of his life and adventures entitled the Faust-book (1592) to have invited some friends to dinner and then to have treated every one of them as Puck treated Bottom. The belief in such things must, it is obvious, have affected very considerably the spirit in which some members of Shakespeare's Elizabethan audiences regarded the incident of the "ass's nolle."

In Bottom's case indeed the transformation is made to appear almost natural by reason of his asinine self-conceit. Fostered by the admiration and 'hero-worship' of his comrades, his "egregious self-complacency develops to the point where his metamorphosis at the hands of Puck seems merely an exquisitely fitting climax to a natural process of evolution" (Boas).

IV

It is rare to find Shakespeare commenting on his own art and profession. He reminds us of an important truth when he makes Theseus hint (v. 213, 214) that the imagination of the audience must "amend" the inadequacy of the stage-representation. Still more striking emphasis is laid on this point in Henry V, where the Chorus, as the mouthpiece of the dramatist, more than once bids the spectator exercise to the full his "imaginary forces" in seeking to realise to the mental eye the scope and splendour of incidents and pageants which the poorly equipped Elizabethan playhouse could but shadow forth under the crudest outward forms. "Work, work your thoughts," urges the Chorus,

"And eke out our performance with your mind."

As in that play (see especially the Prologues to Acts I and III), so here in the "interlude" of the Clowns and the comments thereon, Shakespeare shows us in effect (to quote Dowden) "that it is the business of the dramatist to set the spectator's imagination to work, that the dramatist must rather appeal to the mind's eye than to the eye of sense, and that the co-operation of the spectator with the poet is necessary. For the method of Bottom and his company is precisely the reverse, as Gervinus has observed, of Shakespeare's own method [e.g. of presenting fairyland]. They are determined to leave nothing to be supplied by the imagination. Wall must be plastered; Moonshine must carry lanthorn and bush"; and the duke's humorous objection that "the man i' the moon" ought to be inside his lanthorn is a perfectly fair reductio ad absurdum of their prosaic literalness.

It is in the matter of scenic accessories that the great difference between the modern<sup>1</sup> and the Elizabethan theatre lies. In Shakespeare's time "audiences felt no need for such aids to illusion; their imagination instantly supplied the want. They saw whatever the poet required them to see—as a child sees whatever is suggested to its fancy. For the spectators were children alike in the freshness and in the force of their imagination. If only a placard were hung on one of the doors of the stage bearing in large letters the name of Paris or of Venice, the spectators were at once transported to France or Italy.... This alacrity of imagination on the part of popular audiences was unquestionably an advantage to the English stage in its youth. If an actor made a movement as though he were plucking a flower, the scene was at once understood to be a garden; as in Henry VI [Part I. II. 4], where the adoption of the red and white rose as party badges is represented. If an actor spoke as though he were standing on a ship's deck in a heavy sea, the convention was at once accepted; as in the famous scene in Pericles (III. 2). Shakespeare did not hesitate to take advantage of this accommodating humour on the part of his public" (Brandes).

<sup>1</sup> But in recent years there has been a great reaction from the scenic elaboration which marked Victorian performances of Shakespeare, e.g. the famous revivals at the Lyceum Theatre under Sir Henry Irving. Now (1928) Shakespeare is rendered with a much simpler setting, true to the principle: "the play's the thing"—not the scenery.

HINTS ON METRE

I. Regular Type of Blank Verse

Blank verse<sup>1</sup> consists of unrhymed lines, each of which, is constructed according to the regular type, contains five feet, each foot being composed of two syllables and having a strong stress or accent on the second syllable, so that each line has five stresses, falling respectively on the even syllables, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10. Here is an example from this play:

“The cource | of true | love név|er díd | run smóoth”

(I. I. 134).

The rhythm of a line like this is a “rising” rhythm.

Blank verse prior to Marlowe, the great Elizabethan dramatist whose work influenced Shakespeare, was modelled strictly on this type. Further, this early blank verse was what is termed “end-stopt”: that is to say, there was almost always some pause, however slight, in the sense, and consequently in the rhythm, at the close of each line; while the couplet was normally the limit of the sense. As an example of this “end-stopt,” strictly regular verse, take the following extract from the first play written in blank verse, viz. the tragedy called Gorboduc (1561):

“Why should I live and linger forth my time,
In longer life to double my distress?
O me most woeful wight! whom no mishap
Long ~~ore~~ this day could have bereaved hence:
Mought not these hands by fortune or by fate
Have pierced this breast, and life with iron reft?”

If the whole of a play were written in verse of this kind the effect, obviously, would be intolerably monotonous. Blank verse before Marlowe was intolerably monotonous, and is an especial degree unsuited to the drama, which with its varying situations and moods needs a varied medium of expression more than any other kind of poetry. Marlowe's great service to metre, carried further by Shakespeare, was to introduce variations into the existing type of the blank decasyllabic measure. In fact, analysis of the blank verse of any writer really resolves itself into a study of his modifications of the "end-stopt" regular type.

<sup>1</sup> The metre is sometimes called ‘iambic pentameter verse,’ but this and other terms, with the symbols, of Greek prosody should be avoided, since classical metres, Greek and Latin, are based on a different principle from English prosody. The basis of classical metre is the “quantity” of syllables, and this is represented by the symbols – (long syllable) and ~ (short). The basis of English metre is stress or accent (i.e. the stress laid by the voice on a syllable in pronouncing it); and stress should be represented by the symbols (strong stress) and ^ (weak).

II. Shakespeare's Variations of the Regular Type

The chief variations found in Shakespeare (some of them often combined in the same line) are these:

1. Weak stresses. As we read a passage of blank verse our ear tells us that the stresses or accents are not always<sup>1</sup> of the same weight in all the five feet of each line. Thus in the line

"To déath, | or tò | a vów | of sín|gle life" (I. I. 121)

we feel at once that the stress in the 2nd foot is not equal to that which comes in the other feet. A light stress like this is commonly called a "weak stress." Two weak stresses may occur in the same line—rarely together. The foot in which a weak stress is least frequent is the first. It is perhaps with prepositions that a weak stress, in any foot, occurs most often.

Here are passages with weak stresses:

"Hippó|lytà, | I wóo'd | thee with | my swórd,
And wón | thy lóve, | dóing | thee ín|juries;
But Í | will wéd | thee ín | anóth|er káy,
With pómp, | with trí|umph, and | with rév|elling"

(I. I. 16-19).

"Máking | it mó|mentá|ny às | a soúnd,
Swift as | a shá|dow, shórt | as á|ny dréam;
Briéf as | the líght|ning ín | the cól|lied níght"

(I. I. 143-145).

"And héard | a mér|maid, òn | a dól|phin's báck,
Útt'ring | such dúl|cet and | harmón|ious bréath,
That thè | rude seá | grew cív|íl àt | her sóng,
And cér|tain stárs | shot mád|ly fròm | their sphéres"

(II. I. 150-153).

It may not be amiss to remind the young student that in reading a passage of Shakespeare aloud he should be careful to give the weak stresses as weak, i.e. not lay the same emphasis indiscriminately on all the stressed syllables.

<sup>1</sup> Dr Abbott estimates that rather less than one line of three has the full number of five strong stresses, and that about two lines out of three have four strong stresses.

2. Inverted stresses<sup>1</sup>. The strong stress may fall on the first of the two syllables that form a foot—as the student will have observed in several of the lines quoted above. The following extracts also contain examples:

“Knów of | your youth, | exám|ine wéll | your blóod” (I. i. 68).

“Devoút|ly dótes, | dótes in | idól|atrý” (I. i. 109).

“Swift as | a shá|dow, shórt | as án|y dréam” (I. i. 144).

“Thérefore | the móon, | the góv|ernèss | of flóods,
Pále in | her án|ger, wásh|es áll | the áir” (II. i. 103, 104).

“Márking | th’ embárk|ed trá|ders òn | the flóod” (II. i. 127).

“And, gén|tle Púck, | táke this | transfórm|ed scálp” (IV. i. 69).

“What rév|els áre | in hánd? | Ís there | no pláy
To eáse | the án|guish òf | a tór|t’ring hóur?” (V. i. 36, 37).

“Mérry | and trágl|icàl! | tédious | and briéf!” (V. i. 58).

Inversion of the stress is most frequent after a pause: hence the foot in which it occurs most often is the first (i.e. after the pause at the end of the preceding line); this is particularly the case in the early plays. There may be two inversions in one line (even more—cf. III. 2. 205, 206); but they are seldom consecutive. This shifting of the stress generally emphasises a word. It also varies the regular “rising rhythm” of the normal blank verse by a “falling rhythm.”

3. Extra syllables. Instead of ten syllables a line may contain eleven or even twelve. An extra syllable, unstressed, may occur at any point in the line before or after a pause: hence it is commonest in the last foot (the end of a line being the commonest place for a pause), and frequent about the middle of a line (where there is often a break in the sense or rhythm). Compare

“A góod | persuá|sion: thére|fore, héar | me, Hér(mā)”
(I. i. 156).

“And wíll | you rént | our án|cient lóve | asún(der)?”
(III. 2. 215).

“Thérefore | be óút | of hópe, | of qué(s)tion, | of dóúbt”
(III. 2. 279).

“Lítte | agám! | nóthing | but lów | and lít(tle)!” (III. 2. 326).

“Thát is, | the mád(man): | the lów|er, áll | as frán(tic),
Sees Hél|en’s beáu|ty ín | a brów | of É(gypt)” (V. i. 10, 11).

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Mr Robert Bridges’s work, Milton’s Prosody, pp. 19–21, where Milton’s use of inversions is fully analysed and illustrated in a way that helps the study of Shakespeare’s inversions.

"Here cómes | his gráce | in pér(son). | My nó|ble ún(cle)!"
(Richard II, II. 3. 82).

"My lórd | 'tis nó(thing). |
No mát|ter, thén, | whó sees (it)"
(Richard II, v. 2. 58).

An extra syllable, unstressed<sup>1</sup>, at the end of a line, as in the first and last of these examples, is variously called a "double ending" and a "feminine ending." The use of the "double ending" becomes increasingly frequent as Shakespeare's blank verse grows more complex. "Double endings" increase<sup>2</sup> from 4 per cent. in Love's Labour's Lost to 33 in The Tempest, middle plays such as As You Like It having a percentage of about 18. The percentage of "double endings" is therefore one of the chief of the metrical tests which help us to fix the date of a play. In fact the use of "double endings" is the commonest of Shakespeare's variations of the normal blank verse. The extra syllable at the end of a line not only gives variety by breaking the regular movement of the ten-syllabled lines, but also, where there is no pause after it, carries on the sense and rhythm to the next line.

Sometimes two extra syllables occur at the end—less commonly, in the middle—of a line. Compare in Richard II.

"By síght | of whát | I háve, | your nó|ble cóm(pany)"
(II. 3. 18).

"To áll | his lánds | and sígn(ories): | when hé's | retúr'n'd"
(IV. 1. 89).

"Fírst, to | thy sá|cred státe | wish Í | all háp(píness)"
(v. 6. 6).

This licence is specially frequent with the scansion of proper names; compare

"Bé not | afráíd; | she sháll | not hárm | thee, Hél(ena)"
(III. 2. 321).

The number of lines with two extra syllables increases much in the later plays of Shakespeare.

<sup>1</sup> An extra syllable that bears or would naturally bear a stress is rare in Shakespeare. The use of such syllables at the end of a line is a feature of Fletcher's verse, and the frequent occurrence of them in Henry VIII is one of the metrical arguments that he wrote a good deal of that play. Milton has one or two instances in Comus; cf. 633, "Bore a bright golden flower, but not in this (soil)."

<sup>2</sup> The metrical statistics in these "Hints" are taken from various sources.

4. Unstopt (or Run-on) verse. The blank verse of Shakespeare's early plays shows clearly the influence of the rhymed couplet which he had used so much in his very earliest work. In his early blank verse the rhyme indeed is gone, but the couplet form remains, with its frequent pause of sense, and consequently of rhythm, at the end of the first line, and its still more frequent stop at the end of the second. Lines of this type mark only the first step in the evolution of blank verse: freedom in the expression of sense and varied rhythm are still absent; and freedom and variety come only when the sense "runs on" from one line to another.

If at the end of a line there is any pause in the sense, however slight—such a pause for instance as is marked with a comma—the line is termed "end-stopt." If there is no pause in the sense at the end of the line it is termed "unstopt" or "run-on." There is a progressive increase of "unstopt" verse in the plays. The proportion of "unstopt" to "end-stopt" lines is in Love's Labour's Lost only 1 in 18 (approximately); in The Winter's Tale it is about 1 in 2. The amount, therefore, of "unstopt" verse in a play is another of the metrical tests by which the period of its composition may, to some extent, be inferred.

The rhythm of a line depends greatly on the sense: where there is any pause in the sense there must be a pause in the rhythm. The great merit of "unstopt" blank verse is that the sense by overflowing<sup>1</sup> into the next line tends to carry the rhythm with it, and thus the pauses in the rhythm or time of the verse, instead of coming always at the end, come in other parts of the line.

<sup>1</sup> The overflow is helped by the use of "light" and "weak" endings to a line. "Light endings" are monosyllables on which "the voice can to a small extent dwell": such as the parts of the auxiliary verbs, be, have, will, shall, can, do; pronouns like I, we, thou, you, he, she, they, who, which, etc.; and conjunctions such as when, where, while. "Weak endings" are those monosyllables over which the voice passes with practically no stress at all—e.g. the prepositions at, by, for, from, in, of, on, to, with; also and, but, if, nor, or, than, that all words which go very closely with what follows and therefore link the end of one line with the beginning of the next. The use of these endings belongs to the later plays. "Light endings" are first numerous (21) in Macbeth (1606), and "weak endings" (28) in Antony and Cleopatra (1608). Some of the early plays have neither "light endings" nor "weak." Some have a very few "light endings." Of "weak endings" no play has more than two up till Antony and Cleopatra. The proportion of these endings—"light" and "weak"—is therefore another of the metrical tests applied to the later plays (Ingram).

5. A syllable slurred. "Provided there be only one accented syllable, there may be more than two syllables in any foot. 'It is he' is as much a foot as 'tis he'; 'we will serve' as 'we'll serve'; 'it is over' as 'tis o'er."

"Naturally it is among pronouns and the auxiliary verbs that we must look for unemphatic syllables in the Shakespearian verse. Sometimes the unemphatic nature of the syllable is indicated by a contraction in the spelling. Often, however, syllables may be dropped or slurred in sound, although they are expressed to the sight" (Abbott).

This principle that two unstressed syllables may go in the same foot with one stressed syllable is very important because feet so composed have the rapid trisyllabic effect which tends much to vary the normal line. This trisyllabic rhythm is a recognised element of English verse, especially in the foot which classical prosody calls an anapæst (~~-). Compare:

"Uncoúple<sup>1</sup> | i' the wés|tern vál|ley; lét | them gó"

(IV. I. 112).

This licence is specially characteristic of the later plays, e.g.

"Bút that | the séa, | móunting | to the<sup>2</sup> wél|kin's chéek"

(The Tempest, I. 2. 4).

"Hím that | you térm'd, sir, | 'The góod | old lórd, | Gonzá(lo)'"

(The Tempest, v. 1. 15).

"My Ré|gan coún|sels wéll: cóme out | o' the stórm"

(King Lear, II. 4. 312).

"I the lást | night's stórm | I súch | a féllow sáw"

(King Lear, IV. 1. 34).

6. Omissions. After a pause or interruption there is sometimes an omission (a) of an unstressed syllable (oftenest in the first foot), or (b) of a stress, or (c) even of a whole foot.

"It is obvious" (says Abbott) "that a syllable or foot may be supplied by a gesture, as beckoning, a movement of the head to listen, or of the hand to demand attention": or the omission may be accounted for by an interruption, such as the entrance of another character, or by a marked pause or break in the sense. Compare

(a) "Má|ny yéars | of háp|py dáy's | befál" (Richard II, I. 1. 20).

"Thén | the whí|ning schóol|boy wíth | his sát(chel)"

(As You Like It, II. 7. 145).

<sup>1</sup> A final le (as in 'uncouple') is often slurred thus before a vowel.

<sup>2</sup> Sometimes in such cases the Folio prints th, showing that the word was meant to be slurred (Abbott).

- (b) "Flátte|rers! [Turns to Brutus] Now Brú|tus thánk | your-sélf!" (Julius Caesar, v. 1. 45).
"Messá|la! [Messala turns and salutes] | Whát says | my gén|erál?" (Julius Caesar, v. 1. 70).
(c) "Of múch | less vá|ue ís | mý com|paný
Than yóur | good wórds. | [Pauses and points] But whó | comes hére?" (Richard II, II. 3. 19, 20).

7. Lines of irregular length. Shakespeare uses lines of three feet often; less frequently, lines of two feet, especially to break the course of some very animated speech; half-lines occasionally; brief questions and exclamations, which metrically need not count; and rarely lines with six strong stresses, i.e. Alexandrines<sup>1</sup> (the type of verse which ends each stanza in The Faerie Queene).

As a rule, the use of a short line corresponds with something in the sense, e.g. a break (as at the end of a speech), agitation, conversational effect of question and answer, strong emphasis. At the close of a speech a short line gives perhaps greater emphasis, and certainly variety.

There are also, especially in plays later than A Midsummer-Night's Dream (the blank verse of which is not notable for deviations from the regular type), numerous lines which look like Alexandrines ("apparent Alexandrines," as Abbott calls them) but which on examination are found not to have six unmistakable stresses. Thus in each of the following lines of As You Like It one syllable or more can be slurred or elided or treated as extra-metrical.

- (a) "Sháll|we go, cóz? |
Aý. Fare | you wéll, fair gén|(tl'man<sup>2</sup>)"
(I. 2. 226).

<sup>1</sup> So called either from Alexandre Paris, an old French poet who used this metre, or from the Roman d'Alexandre, a 12th century poem about Alexander the Great, written in rhyme, lines of six feet, in couplets. It is the metre of French tragedy (e.g. of the tragedies of Racine and Corneille).

<sup>2</sup> In this and similar cases, such as (b), (d), the symbol ' is intended to show that a vowel is ignored in the scansion, though heard more or less in pronunciation. There is no means of marking the different degrees of slurring: thus, conf'rence represents with fair accuracy the pronunciation which must be given to conference in line (b), whereas res'due in line (e) would over-emphasise the slurring sound required in residue.

The references here are to the numbering of the lines in the Pitt Press edition of As You Like It.

- (b) "I cán|not spéak | to hér, | yet shé | urg'd cón(f'rence)"
(I. 2. 236).
- (c) "The flúx | of cóm(pany): | anón, | a cáre|less hérd"
(II. 1. 52).
- (d) "Thís is | no pláce; | this hpúse | is bút | a bút(ch'ry)"
(II. 3. 27).
- (e) "That lów'd | your fáth(er): | the rési|due òf | your fór(tune)"
(II. 7. 195).
- (f) "In bít|ternéss. | The cóm|mon éx|ecú(tioner<sup>1</sup>)"
(III. 5. 3).
- (g) "I sée | no móre | in yóu | than in | the órd("n'ry)"
(III. 5. 40).
- (h) "You foól|ish shép|herd, whére|fore dó | you fól(low her)"
(III. 5. 47).
- (i) "Than thát | míx'd in | his chéek; | 'twas júst | the díf(f'rence)"
(III. 5. 119).
- (j) "And hé | did rén|der hím | the móst | unná(t'ral)"
(IV. 3. 122).

Again, some seemingly six-foot lines are really "trimeter couplets": that is, "couplets of two verses of three accents each...often thus printed as two separate short verses in the Folio....Shakespeare seems to have used this metre mostly for rapid dialogue and retort, and in comic and the lighter kind of serious poetry" (Abbott).

These, then, are the chief modes by which Shakespeare diversifies the structure of regular blank verse. Their general result has been well summed up thus: that they make the effect of Shakespeare's maturer blank verse rather rhythmical than rigidly metrical, i.e. more a matter of stresses distributed with endless variety than of syllables calculated and accented according to a normal standard; and there is a progressive development in the trisyllabic direction. Every student should grasp these variations thoroughly, particularly the first five, and observe the illustrations of them that occur in any play (especially the later plays) that he may be studying. And he must, of course, remember that scansion depends much on the way in which a writer abbreviates or lengthens sounds, as the metre requires.

Abbreviation comprises all the cases in which a syllable does not count metrically—whether it be elided<sup>2</sup>, contracted, or slurred. Many abbreviations belong to everyday speech, others to poetical usage.

<sup>1</sup> Slurred into something like execú-shner.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. the occasional elision of the and to before a vowel, e.g. "Stír up | t'h' Athé|nian yóuth | to m<sup>c</sup>r|riménts" (I. 1. 12); "T'envé|lope ànd | contain | celés|tial spírīts" (Henry V, I. 1. 31).

Of lengthening of sounds the most important example is the scansion of a monosyllable as a whole foot<sup>1</sup>.

For full details the student must refer to the standard authority, viz. Dr Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, pp. 344-387.

III. Shakespeare's use of Rhyme

In his early plays Shakespeare uses the rhymed couplet<sup>2</sup> very largely; but gradually the amount of rhyme declines, so that the proportion of rhymed couplets in a piece is one of the surest indications of the period to which it belongs.

Is there much rhyme? the play is early.

Is there little rhyme? the play is late.

"In Love's Labour's Lost there are about two rhymed lines to every one of blank verse. In The Comedy of Errors there are 380 rhymed lines to 1150 unrhymed. In The Tempest two rhymed lines occur; in The Winter's Tale not one" (Dowden).

In applying the rhyme test we must exclude the cases where, as in this play—see pp. xi, xxxiii—there is a special reason for the use of rhyme. Thus the rhyme of the Masque in Act iv of The Tempest has no bearing whatsoever on the date of the play, because Masques were usually written in rhymed measures. Similarly all songs such as we get in As You Like It, The Tempest, and The Winter's Tale must, of course, be excluded.

Let us consider for a moment the reasons which led Shakespeare to adopt blank verse and gradually abandon rhyme.

As a medium of dramatic expression blank verse, of the varied Shakespearian type, has these points of superiority over rhyme:

1. Naturalness. Rhyme is artificial. It reminds us, therefore, —perhaps I should say, never lets us forget—that the play is a play, fiction and not reality, because in real life people do not converse in rhyme. Especially in moments of great emotion does rhyme destroy the illusion of reality: we cannot conceive of Lear raving at Goneril in rhymed couplets. Blank verse on the other hand has something of the naturalness of conversation, and naturalness is a very great help towards making fiction appear like truth.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. moon (II. I. 7); room (II. I. 58); three (III. 2. 437); comes (III. 2. 439); new (IV. I. 40); snow (IV. I. 171); own (IV. I. 197). So fare in 'farewell' is treated as two syllables sometimes.

<sup>2</sup> i.e. of five feet in each line; cf. for instance I. I. 180-251.

2. Freedom. The necessity of rhyming imposes restraint upon a writer such as blank verse obviously does not involve, and often forces him to invert the order of words or even to use a less suitable word. The rhythm too of the rhymed couplet tends strongly to confine the sense within the limits of the couplet, whereas in the blank verse of a skilful writer the sense "runs on" easily from line to line. In fact, in the rhymed couplet the verse is apt to dominate the sense; while in blank verse the sense finds unfettered expression. And so blank verse has not only something of the naturalness but also something of the freedom of conversation.

3. Variety. In a paragraph of rhymed couplets the pauses in the sense and therefore in the rhythm are monotonous. We constantly have a pause at the end of the first line and almost always a pause at the end of the second. With the uniformity of a passage composed in this form contrast the varied rhythms of such blank verse as that of The Tempest, where the pauses are distributed with ever-changing diversity of cadence.

Again, the rhyme of a long narrative poem when read, or of a short lyric when recited, has a pleasing effect; but in a long spell of spoken verse I think that the sound of rhyme, though at first agreeable to it, gradually tires the ear.

What rhyme we do get in Shakespeare's later plays is mainly at the end of a scene, when it serves to indicate the conclusion, and (less commonly) at the close of a long speech, when it forms a kind of climax. As to the former use Dr Abbott says: "Rhyme was often used as an effective termination at the end of the scene. When the scenery<sup>1</sup> was not changed, or the arrangements were so defective that the change was not easily perceptible, it was, perhaps, additionally desirable to mark "that a scene was finished."

And just as rhyme often marks the close of a scene or dramatic situation, so it sometimes marks the close of a chapter in a man's career, and suggests farewell. A striking example of this use of rhyme occurs in As You Like It, II. 3. 67-76, where old Adam and Orlando, about to set forth on their expedition, severally bid farewell to their former life. Similarly in Richard II, II. 2. 140-147, the rhyme expresses the feeling of the King's favourites that their period of prosperity is over and they are parting for ever; while in v. 5. 109-118, it emphasises the tragedy of the close of Richard's life. Again, in King Lear (a comparatively late play, 1605-1606) the banished Kent is made to use rhyme in his leave-taking (I. I. 183-190). See also Richard II, II. 4. 21-24; V. I. 79-102.

<sup>1</sup> There was no movable scenery; the only outward indication of the locality intended was some stage 'property'—e.g. "a bed to signify a bed-chamber; a table with pens upon it to signify a counting-house; or a board bearing in large letters the name of the place"—Dowden.

One other noticeable purpose of rhyme is found in plays as late as Othello (about 1604) and Lear, viz. to express moralising reflections on life and give them a sententious, epigrammatic effect. Dowden instances Othello, I. 3. 202-219, and II. I. 149-161. This use of rhyme is natural because proverbial wisdom so often takes a rhymed form. Maxims stick better in the memory when they are rhymed. See Richard II, II. I. 7, 8, 27-30.

Prose

A Midsummer-Night's Dream illustrates Shakespeare's main uses of prose:

(1) For parts where a conversational, rather than a tragic or poetic, effect is desired; cf. the comments of Theseus and his courtiers in the "interlude" in Act V:

(2) In comic parts and (3) the speech of characters of humble position; as in all the scenes where the "rude mechanicals" appear and discuss their play.

Other uses of prose by Shakespeare, not found in A Midsummer-Night's Dream, are for letters, proclamations, etc., and occasionally (as though even blank verse were too artificial) for the expression of emotion and mental derangement (cf. King Lear, III. 4).

HINTS ON SHAKESPEARE'S ENGLISH

The following elementary hints are intended to remind young students of some simple but important facts which they are apt to forget when asked to explain points of grammar and idiom in Shakespeare's English.

To begin with, avoid using the word "mistake" in connection with Shakespearian English. Do not speak of "Shakespeare's mistakes." In most cases the "mistake" will be yours, not his. Remember that things in his English which appear to us irregular may for the most part be explained by one of two principles:

(1) The difference between Elizabethan and modern English;

(2) The difference between spoken and written English.

(1) As to the former: what is considered bad English now may have been considered good English in Shakespeare's time. Language must change in the space of 300 years. Elizabethan English, recollect, contains an element of Old English, i.e. inflected English that had case-endings for the nouns, terminations for the verbs, and the like. By the end of the 16th century most of these inflections had died out, but some survived, and the influence of the earlier inflected stage still affected the language. Often when we enquire into the history of some Elizabethan idiom which seems to us curious we find that it is a relic of an old usage. Let us take an example.

There are numerous cases in Shakespeare where a verb in the present tense has the inflection -s, though the subject is plural; cf. the following lines in Richard II, II. 3. 4, 5:

"These high wild hills and rough uneven ways Draws out our mules, and makes them wearisome."

The verbs draws and makes appear to be singular: but probably each is plural in agreement with its plural antecedents hills and ways; s = es being the plural inflection of the present tense used in the Northern dialect of Old English. In the Southern dialect the inflection was eth; in the Midland en. When Shakespeare was born all three forms were getting obsolete; but all three are found in his works, eth<sup>1</sup> and en<sup>2</sup> very rarely, es or s many times. His use of the last is a good illustration (a) of the difference<sup>1</sup> between Shakespearian and modern English, (b) of one of the main causes of that difference—viz. the influence of a still earlier inflected English.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. hath and doth; used as plurals.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. wax-en, II. I. 56; see Glossary.

(2) A dramatist makes his characters speak, and tells his story through their mouths: he is not like a historian who writes the story in his own words. The English of a play which is meant to be spoken must not be judged by the same standard as the English of a History which is meant to be read. For consider how much more correct and regular in style a book usually is than a speech or a conversation. In speaking we begin a sentence one way and we may finish it in another, some fresh idea striking us or some interruption occurring. Speech is liable to constant changes, swift turns of thought; it leaves things out, supplying the omission, very likely, with a gesture; it often combines two forms<sup>2</sup> of expression. But a writer can correct and polish his composition until all irregularities are removed. Spoken English therefore is less regular than written English; and it is to this very irregularity that Shakespeare's plays owe something of their lifelike reality. If Shakespeare made his characters speak with the correctness of a copybook we should regard them as mere puppets, not as living beings.

Here is a passage taken from Henry V (iv. 3. 34–36); suppose that comment on its “grammatical peculiarities” is required:

“Rather proclaim it...

That he which hath no stomach to this fight,

Let him depart.”

Two things strike us at once—“he which” and “That he...let him depart.” “He which” is now bad English; then it was quite regular English. The student should say that the usage was correct in Elizabethan English, and give some illustration of it. The Prayer-Book will supply him with a very familiar one.

“That he...let him depart.” A prose-writer would have finished with the regular sequence “may depart.” But Henry V is supposed to say the words; and at the moment he is deeply stirred. Emotion leads him to pass suddenly from indirect to direct speech. The conclusion, less regular, is far more vivid. The brief passage therefore exemplifies the difference (a) between Elizabethan English and our own, (b) between spoken <sup>1</sup> Another aspect of it to which the Notes call attention is the free Elizabethan use of participial and adjectival terminations; see I. i. 184, v. 171.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. the notes on I. i. 129, iv. 2. 10, v. 250.

English and written. Always consider whether the one principle or the other can be applied.

Three general features of Shakespeare's English should be observed: (1) its brevity, (2) its emphasis, (3) its tendency to interchange parts of speech.

(1) Brevity. Shakespeare often uses terse elliptical turns of expression. This couplet is from Troilus and Cressida (I. 3. 287, 288):

"And may that soldier a mere recreant prove That means not, hath not, or is not in love!"

Put fully, the second line would run, "That means not to be, hath not been, or is not in love." Cf. again Richard II, v. 5. 26, 27.

"Who sitting in the stocks refuge their shame,
That many have and others must sit there";

i.e. 'console themselves with the thought that many have sat there.' This compactness of diction is very characteristic of Shakespeare. For note that the omission of the italicised words, while it shortens the form of expression, does not obscure the sense, since the words are easily supplied from the context. That is commonly the case with Shakespeare's ellipses or omissions: they combine brevity with clearness. See II. 1. 146 and II. 2. 73 (omission of the relative, a frequent and important ellipse).

(2) Emphasis: common examples of this are the double negative (II. 1. 201), and the double comparative or superlative (II. 1. 208, III. 1. 21, notes). Perhaps it is seen most conspicuously in the order of words.

(3) Parts of speech interchanged: "almost any part of speech can be used as any other part of speech" (Abbott). This feature is very important. As illustrations of it in this play take 'gallant' = 'gallantly' (I. 2. 25), 'bootless' = 'bootlessly' (II. 1. 37), i.e. adjective = adverb; 'fair' = 'fairness' (I. 1. 182), 'white' = 'whiteness' (III. 2. 144), i.e. adjective = noun; and for noun = adjective cf. 'warr~~ing~~' (II. 1. 71), for noun = verb cf. 'verse' (II. 1. 67).

INDEX OF WORDS AND PHRASES

*This list applies to the NOTES and APPENDIX: words of which longer explanations are given will be found in the GLOSSARY.
The references are to the pages*

ABBREVIATIONS:—

adj.=adjective.    adv.=adverb.    n.=noun.    vb=verb.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| abridgement 110address (vb) 89admire of 74after-supper 110against 96, 111aggravate 78alone 96approve 88artificial 97ask 76aunt 81austerity 70 badge 96bait (vb) 97barren 94barm 80bate 73batty 100beard 82behowl 118belike 71bellows-mender 77beshrew! 88blind-worm 87blood 69, 71bolt 84bootless 80bosom 68bouncing 82brake 86breath 84, 95brisky 92broach (vb) 114burr 98buskined 82by'r lakın 90 | canker 87canker-blossom 99capacity 112catching 73changeling 80charm (vb) 104cheek by jole 100chide 84, 105childing 83chough 94church-way 118clerk 112cloister 69close (adj.) 94cold 84collied 71compact of 109companion 67con 78, 111conceit 68concern (vb) 69condole 76confusion 71contagious 82continent 82coy 102cranny 92create 119critical 41cross (n.) 71cry "cuckoo" 93cry mercy 93"Cupid's flower" 104cut bowstrings 79cut thread and thrum 116 "danceit" 118 |
|---|--|

date 100 dead 95
 debate (n) 83 defect 91 desire you of 94
 dewlap 81, 105
 "Dian's bud" 103, 104, 143
 die the death 69
 discharge (vb) 107
 disfigure 69
 distemperature 83
 dole (n.) 116
 dragon 100
 draw a bill 78
 duke 68

earthlier happy 70 edict 72
 egilantine 86
 elf 80 enamelled 87 enforced 94
 eke 92
 epilogues (in Shakespeare) 117 estate (vb) 70 exile (vb) 101
 extenuate 71

faint 74 fair (n) 73
 fall (trans. vb) 113
 fancy 72, 106
 fancy-free 84
 fancy-sick 95
 favour 79, 103 fearful 112 fee 96 fell 80 fellow 103
 fierce 103
 figure (vb) 74
 filly 80
 flewed 105
 flood 83
 flourish of trumpets 112
 flout 89
 fond 89, 99
 fond on 87
 form 74

forth 72
 forty 85
 French-crown-colour 78

gait 119
 gallant (adv.) 76
 gaud 68
 gentleness 89
 give...the lie to 93
 glance at 82
 go about 107 go forward 107
 gossip's cup 80
 green eyes 117
 griffin 86
 grim-looking 114
 grisly 113 grow to a point 75

hail down (vb) 74
 hare-lip 119 heart 108
 hempen home-spuns 92
 heresy 89
 hob 80
 honey-bag 93
 how chance? 71, 116
 human 83, 88

imbrue 117
 immediately 68 impeach 85
 in=on 82
 increase (n.) 83
 in grace of 106
 in snuff 116
 in souls 97
 in spite of 97 intend 99

jangling 100
 juvenal 92

knot-grass 99
 know of 69
 "leathern wings" 87
 lion-fell 115
 liquor 100

little 93
lob 80
lode-star 73
love-in-idleness 85
low 99

make all split 76
make mouths upon 98
man in the moon 113
marry! 75 marshal 89 maze 82
mazed 83 mechanical (n.) 94
more better 90
mote 116
mouse (vb) 116
mural 114
musk-rose 86

neaf 102
neeze 81
new 104
nine men's morris 82
nole 94

obscenely 79 observation 104
o'er shoes 95
oes 97
of all loves 90 office 87
of force 95
orb 79
original (n) 83
other = others 103
other some 74 ounce 88
ox-lip 86

pageant 96
palpable-gross 117
paragon 107
pard 88
parlous 90 parts 97 passing 80
patched 107 paved 82

pearl 74 period 112
perséver 98
pipes of corn 81
plain 101 prefer 108
preposterously 96
present (vb) 91
prevailment 68
prey 90
princess 97 privilege 85
prodigious 119
prologue (=speaker of) 112 proper 78
properties 78
protest (vb) 70 pump (n) 108
purple-in-grain 78

quail 116 quantity 74 questions 86
quire 81

recorder 112 rent (vb) 98 respect (vb) 72
révénue 72 rheumatic 83
right (adj.) 99 ringlet 82
ripe (vb) 89
rock (vb) 104 rough-cast 92
russet-pated 94
run through fire 89

sampler 97
sanded 105 schooling 70
scrip 75
seething 109
self-affairs 70
sensible 114
serpent's tongue (i.e. hiss) 120 set to 93
several 119
shadow 100, 120

shallow 94
 sheen 80
 *simplicity 73
 since = when 84 sinister 114 sister 69
 skill 89
 sleep = sleeping 106 small 77 solemnity 67 solemnly 104
 sooth 89 sort (vb) 100 sort with 111
 spaniel 85
 speak you fair 85
 sphere 79
 sphery 89, 137
 spiced 83
 spleen 71 spotted 70
 square (vb) 80
 squash 94
 stand close 95
 stand upon points 112
 stealth 99 steep 81
 still (adv.) 74
 streak 87 stretched 111
 summer's spring 90
 superpraise 97

 "tailor" cry 81
 take on 98
 taste of (n) 74
 tear a cat 76
 testy 100 —
 the centre 95
 thick-skin 94
 thin 83

throstle 93 throw 87
 tide 114
 tiring-house 90 to 82, 112 to his head 70
 foiled 111
 touch 95, 99 toward 92
 trace (vb) 80, 137
 translated 92 transported 107
 transpose 74
 troth 88
 tuneable 73

unbreathed 111
 unhardened 68
 urge 99

Valentine (Saint) 106
 villagery 80
 virgin patent 70
 votaress 83, 84

want (vb) 83
 wash 83
 waste 81, 118 watery moon 84
 what cheer? 71
 white (n.) 96
 whither away? 73
 wither out 67
 without 72
 woodbine 86, 142
 worm 95
 worser 85
 wrath (adj.) 80

you were best 75
 your 78

